Humble beauty

Holbrook watercolor artist now showing

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Isabella Hoell captures evening at Holbrook Fire Department Station 1, while her "Memorial Day at Mary Wales Park," offers a timely and timeless patriotic scene of flag-waving parade-watchers. Hoell's watercolor work is on display through the end of the month at the Holbrook Public Library.

Like many of her colleagues, Holbrook painter Isabella Hoell first took up the practice in middle age, taking classes at Brockton's Fuller Museum and at Cohasset's South Shore Art Center and in Duxbury beginning in 1980.

Now 75, Hoell has since gained affiliations with numerous area art organizations, including the North River and Cape Cod Art Associations and others in Randolph, Duxbury, Weymouth and elsewhere. Her work has appeared in a group exhibit at Norwell's South Shore Science Center, a two-person show at Foxboro Library and in the watercolorist's first solo exhibit at Weymouth's Tufts Library, and gathered an assortment of local gallery show awards.

Currently, Hoell enjoys a milestone of sorts with her first solo exhibition in her hometown, where she has lived for some fifty years. Twenty-five of the artist's watercolors are on display in the browsing galleries at Holbrook Public Library through the end of May.

"My painting is an effort to share something of the beauty I perceive in everyday life with others," said Hoell in her artist statement for the Holbrook Library show, which is simply titled "Watercolors." "The extraordinary and intriguing shapes of the long shadows cast by objects in the morning light or by the window in the late afternoon setting sun inspire me to design compositions of humble household objects."

Hoell further describes her ideal desire and aim with her work, to get the viewer to possibly rediscover the world around them, and the artistic appeal of ordinary, often overlooked, items and scenes. Over a diverse selection of fruit and floral still life images, and a pair of snapshot suburban neighborhood scenes, Hoell emphasizes her points with an individualistic flair for bold, striking colors. Thus, her still lifes are certainly never stiff and her floral images are sensitive as expected but not humble.

Standout examples of these qualities include "Red Roses," which illuminates not only its title subjects but also the radiant glow of their white china vase, and "Transparent Yellow Pepper," which depicts its subject in vivid, appetizing form. Other works such as "Yellow Iris," "Moonglow" and "Summer Fruit" follow a similar standard.

Hoell describes florals and still lifes as her specialty, but breaks from that mode with the two neighborhood scenes in the show. These pieces include "Evening at Station One," which lends an intriguing nocturnal feel to Holbrook's main firehouse, and "Memorial Day at Mary Wales Park," offering a timely and timeless patriotic scene of flag-waving parade-watchers.

"Ultimately you have to paint what you enjoy," she said. "I often paint around Holbrook, Norwell and Duxbury, but most of my still life work is done at home. The back lighting in my house always makes great shadows for me to work from."

DJ Don rides the digital wave

Randolph musician releases debut CD

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The age of The New Digital Sound has arrived.

And we're not talking about the latest sprout of digital music channel offerings from cable-TV. This New Digital Sound is a possible bold new direction for the music itself.

It's also the name of both the new independent music and production company founded by Randolph musician Don Smith, and the multi-instrumentalist/technophile's debut CD which is his company's first artistic venture.

Smith, known musically and professionally as DJ Don Smith, would like The New Digital Sound to join in the success of breakthrough techno-based artists such as Moby and the Chemical Brothers.

"My objective is to create cutting edge music forms as an artist and producer," said Smith."I formed my own production company two years ago and have worked on the material (for the debut CD) since shortly after that. I love to take the newest technology and create music which is out of the ordinary and original."

Katzenberg gets animated about 'Spirit'

By Ed Symkus
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

If there weren't already a character called the King of Cartoons on the old TV show "Pee-wee's Playhouse," the moniker could have gone to Jeffrey Katzenberg. Then again, Katzenberg, a small, wiry man who moves fast and speaks quickly — but slows down and waxes eloquent when the subject turns to moviemaking — doesn't really like the word "cartoon." He prefers "animated film."

Katzenberg is the "K" in DreamWorks SKG, the other letters standing for his partners Steven Spielberg and David Geffen. In addition to his live-action blockbusters ("Raiders of the Lost Ark," "Flashdance" and "Pretty Woman"), Katzenberg has a string of animated hits on his resume: "The Little Mermaid," "The Lion King," "The Prince of Egypt," "Chicken Run" and "Shrek."

His newest film as producer is the animated feature "Spirit: Stallion of the Cimarron," an epic tale of a wild horse in the Old West who is captured and mistreated by soldiers, escapes to live with kind, nature-worshipping Native Americans and

Homemade granola bars

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Once in a great while I come across something in a bakery that is so good that it reminds me of my first croissant – rich, addictive, and, well, deadly. When I first tasted one of Joanne Chang's fruit-filled granola bars at her bakery, "Flour," in the South End of Boston, I knew that I had hit pay dirt. The filling was rich with flavor but not jammy and the granola layers were moist, chewy, and deeply satisfying. The question was how to adapt her recipe for a home cook.

The basic notion is that dried fruit is hydrated in water and sugar. A filling of flour, oats, nuts, coconut, etc. is made in a food processor. The bottom is prebaked, the filling added, the top crust pressed on top, and the whole thing is then finished in the oven. Simple enough except that the recipe I was given called for 10 pounds of ingredients, enough to provide for a family of 12.

Starting with a 9 by 13-inch pan, I found that 3 1/2 cups of dried fruit did the trick. A mix of dried unsweetened cranberries, apples, and apricots produced an intense flavor when hydrated with sugar and water for about a half hour. The apples are absorbent and soften the filling; the cranberries and apricots provide an intense flavor and plenty of chew. I also tested sweetened cranberries as well as dried blueberries, strawberries, and cherries. The original trio was the winner.

For the dough, I started with flour and oats in equal parts. For the sugar, I tested all kinds and finally settled on light brown. Joanne also adds sweetened coconut flakes (not unsweetened) that add a nice burst of flavor and chew. Nuts are an essential addition to any granola bar and I preferred pecans and almonds to walnuts which were bitter. (Toasting the nuts adds flavor but is not essential.) Sunflower seeds, part of the original recipe, were also good but I preferred to add them with the other dry ingredients instead of pressing them into the bottom crust. Spices quickly became overwhelming but a bit of cinnamon and salt, an ingredient missing from the original recipe, was called for.

Butter and honey were the other two key ingredients. Two and a half sticks of butter was just right – any more and the bars became greasy and any less and they became tough. (And you thought that granola bars were healthy!) Honey added both flavor and moisture and three ounces of honey (a generous third cup) was just right.

The method is simple enough. The dry ingredients are pulsed in a food processor and then the butter and honey are added and the mixture is pulsed again until the butter is about the size of small peas. (Do not overprocess – the dough will bake up greasy and heavy.) This mixture is reserved in a large bowl and then the nuts are pulsed with the coconut. The two mixtures are then combined by hand.

About two thirds of the mixture is baked in the bottom of the pan, the fruit compote is spread on top, and the bars are finished with the leftover dough. The pan is returned to the oven for 20 minutes. Heaven on earth.

GRANOLA BARS WITH FRUIT FILLING

Do not overprocess the flour/oats/butter mixture or the bars will turn out greasy. If you cannot find unsweetened dried cranberries, use sweetened and reduce the sugar to 1/3 cup or you can try substituting dried cherries. Toast the nuts in a 375-degree oven for about eight minutes or until lightly colored and fragrant. Cool completely. If you have a convection oven, you might try it with this recipe but the baking time will be shorter.

For the fruit compote

1 1/4 cup dried apricots, coarsely chopped

1 1/4 cup dried apples, coarsely chopped

1 1/4 cups dried cranberries, unsweetened preferred, see note

1/2 cup granulated sugar

2 1/2 cups water

For the dough

2 cups all purpose flour

2 cups quick cooking oats

1 cup light brown sugar, lightly packed

1/2 teaspoon salt

1/4 teaspoon ground cinnamon

20 tablespoons (two and one-half sticks) cold unsalted butter cut into 1/2-inch pieces

3 ounces honey (1/3 cup plus 1 tablespoon)

1 1/2 cups sweetened coconut flakes

1 cup toasted pecans or almonds or a combination of both

1/2 cup sunflower seeds, roasted and salted

1. In a medium saucepan combine all of the ingredients for the fruit compote and bring to a boil. Reduce heat to maintain a simmer and cook, until the liquid is absorbed and the fruit is fully hydrated, about 30 minutes. Meanwhile heat the oven to 375 degrees and line the bottom of a 9 x 13-inch pan with parchment.

2. Place the flour, oats, light brown sugar, salt and cinnamon in the bowl of a food processor. Pulse briefly to combine. Add the butter and honey and process until pieces of butter are no larger than a small pea, about twelve one second pulses. (Do not overprocess!) Transfer the mixture to a large mixing bowl. Place the coconut, pecans and/or almonds and the sunflower seeds in the food processor bowl. Process until the nuts are well broken up, about eight one second pulses. Transfer to the large mixing bowl. Using your fingers gently mix the two batches of ingredients together until well combined. When fully incorporated the dough will look like lumpy wet sand.

3. Add about two thirds of the mixture into the bottom of the prepared pan and gently pat down into an even layer. Reserve the remaining portion (about three generous cups) in a cool place until needed. Bake until medium golden brown, about 18 minutes. Remove the pan from the oven and evenly spread the fruit compote over the top. Sprinkle the remaining dough in an even layer over the fruit. Return the pan to the oven and bake for an additional 20 minutes or until the topping is dark golden brown. (Underbaked bars will be damp and greasy.) Cool completely before cutting.

Makes about two dozen 1 x 3 inch bars.

JAM FILLING VARIATION

You may substitute homemade or low sugar jam for the fruit compote but the bars will lose some chewiness.

Sensational salvias

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As the sun set on a clear, chilly evening in mid-May, I scurried about gathering up my collection of tender plants lining my walkway to bring them into the warm confines of my sunroom for another night. With a record low temperature set the night before and hints for a potential frost, it seemed prudent to delay planting my delicate treasures until the traditional date of Memorial Day weekend. Despite my best intentions to limit acquisitions this season, a sizeable accumulation of new perennials and annuals mysteriously appeared during the past few weeks.

As a passionate collector of plants, I am always on the lookout for the latest introductions and I consider it my mission to try every new perennial that comes on the market. To support my plant habit, I work at two nurseries which not only helps me to pay for these new acquisitions, but affords me the opportunity to purchase recent arrivals before other plant junkies whisk them away.

Many gardeners begin acquiring plants innocently only to be suddenly overtaken by a need to have one of everything. Eventually, a focus seems to develop with a few plant families taking center stage. Hostas, daylilies, and iris may be chosen for their diversity and ease of culture but there are many others that offer a broad range of opportunity. One genus, the sages or salvias, is less likely to come to mind, but there are hundreds of species including annuals, perennials, biennials and shrubby varieties waiting to be discovered by gardeners who have sunny, well-drained sites. Many salvias exhibit spectacular spikes in a broad range of colors; others provide aromatic foliage and may be used for culinary purposes.

My first experience with this diverse family of plants was years ago when I found time to grow many of my plants from seed and I started vegetables and herbs indoors. Salvia officinalis or the common sage was among my first successes and quickly grew to become a large, gray-green subshrub in my herb garden. I often picked the leaves to use for cooking and its attractive, aromatic foliage and light purple spires were a pleasant addition to the garden. Attracted to the colorful foliage of S. Purpurascens and S. Tricolor, I was disappointed when I found these to be less hardy. More recently, I have added the cultivar S. Berggarten to my perennial borders as a hardy source of gray foliage which persists through the winter.

For a dramatic splash of summer color, few annuals rival the spectacular Salvia splendens or scarlet sage. A popular bedding plant, perhaps best known for its fiery shades of red, new introductions include salmon, pink, burgundy, purple and white. Full sun, regular removal of spent flowers and supplemental moisture during dry spells will produce vivid, bushy displays. Less commonly available but a delightful addition to annual plantings, S. coccinea or the Texas sage offers coral, red or white spires.

The color blue is well represented in the Salvia family and S. farinacea is a popular source of this color for bedding plants and containers. This hardy annual offers slender spikes of deep blue on 20 inch stems that blend well with nearly every annual or it can be used to provide this highly sought color all summer long in the perennial border. Salvia 'Victoria' is the most widely grown blue variety and a white form, S. 'Cirrus', adds a pleasant source of silvery white spires.

Sensational large, soft, woolly, silver leaves are the highlight of Salvia argentea. This biennial sage never fails to attract attention in the garden with its rosette of showy 8-inch scalloped leaves and tall spikes of white flowers. Ideal for hot, dry, sunny locales, if flower stalks are removed immediately after flowering, the plant may rebloom and has a better chance of returning the following season if it is not allowed to go to seed.

Among the perennial sages, Salvia sylvestris 'May Night' is well deserving of its designation as a 'perennial plant of the year'. Dense, deep purple, 2-foot spires above crinkled green foliage bloom for weeks and if removed promptly, blooming may recur. Full sun and well-drained soils produce large, husky plants. Other cultivars include S. Blue Queen and S. Blue Hill demonstrating blue-violet flowers, S. Snow Hill with lovely white spires and S. Rose Queen for shades of rose-pink.

Soft, hairy, wavy leaves characterize the charming Salvia verticillata cultivars. Clusters of lavender or white flowers on arching 12-inch stems bloom throughout the summer if spent flowers are removed. Look for S. Purple Rain and S. alba for a delightful display of long-lasting flowers in full sun and well-drained soil. Salvia lyrata Purple Knockout is my most recent acquisition of the sage family with showy bronze-purple foliage for sun or partial shade.

Container gardens are the ideal showcase for some of the less commonly available sages including the gentian sage, S. patens, and S. guaranitica, both of which exhibit comparatively large, sensational gentian blue flowers. Flowers are borne in fewer numbers but their color is truly alluring.

Perhaps my favorite reason for growing the sages is their ability to attract hummingbirds. Tubular flowers are irresistible to these fascinating, tiny creatures and while red draws them to the garden, all colors of these diverse plants seem equally enticing.

Smith's musical ambitions have been supported in part by NDS's other specialty, as one of any number of DJ/entertainment providers for private parties and corporate functions in the local area. Smith has used this business experience, with its values of original concepts in music presentation, to take it a step farther with the CD release of unique, original compositions in his efforts to expand into the music field.

If Smith is optimistic about the potential of techno-based music, and the various means and media at his disposal for its creation, he's also enthusiastic about the fact that the music itself is slowly gaining mainstream visibility. DJ Don is certainly quick to cite Moby and the Chemical Brothers as major influences on his own musical adventures, but his debut disc serves up textures and flavorings that might put listeners in mind of techno-merging-rock acts such as Nine Inch Nails, Tool and Linkin Park as well.

But optimistic is probably one word that won't come to mind when checking out the ambience of the music and disc themselves. The cover of The New Digital Sound features an image of a roomful of broken furniture, paint-peeling walls and other assorted squalor in what looks like a condemned building. The music therein contains voiceover sound-samples describing mass murder, sexual perversion and terminal sickness amidst the dark, eerie, digitally-synthesized sound-scapes.

There are, however, some energizing beats and grooves to be found in the disc's thirteen tracks, which can just as easily be heard as one long, foreboding song or suite. The track, "You," delivers a funky, drum-machine beat beneath simple, melancholy piano chords and melodies, and "Minimal" conveys multi-layered, repeating keyboard lines creating a spooky, celestial effect. While NDS the disc obviously lacks the pop-flavored and radio-friendly hooks of something like Moby's breakthrough album Play, these two DJ Don tracks have been regarded as accessible enough to gain recent regular airplay on RadioBoston.com, an online area outlet for new alternative and experimental music.

"I call it music you can vibe to, generally speaking," Smith said. "I think there's an audience out there for original music that doesn't ever get played on your local radio station with its tight format. And even people who've listened to my disc since it came out, they may think it's a bit bizarre and unusual at first, but then they tell me the more they listen, they more they like it."

Like Moby has done over the last two years, Smith too would like to look into licensing his music to various commercial outlets, such as movies, TV programming and advertising, video games, the internet and anything else conceivable the future might bring. Original film scoring is a field that interests him as well.

"My dream is to turn NDS into a band as well as studio project, and develop a live show," he said. "Once I can put that together, I'll be looking for the chance to land gigs at Boston clubs like the Middle East — downstairs, or the Phoenix Landing. Any club that's willing to take the risk on our kind of music."

ends up on a journey of adventure. The film looks like "old school" animation, far, far away from the computer wizardry of "Toy Story" and "Shrek."

"This is the first movie since 'The Lion King' told through the eyes of a four-legged animal," says Katzenberg. "But rather than just follow the cookie cutter [format] that has gotten a little tired and overused, everything about this movie kind of takes its own course. It's told through the eyes of the horse, but the horse doesn't talk. It's a musical, but nobody sings. There are comedic moments in it, but they're not gathered from a sidekick. It takes the sort of standard ways in which animation has worked in the past and gone in a very different direction."

Part of that direction is that, although most of the film has a painterly look, it also boasts a computer-generated kick, a seamless blend of CGI and hand-drawing, all overseen by Katzenberg.

There's a Hollywood legend about Katzenberg's arrival at Disney, a studio that was built on animation, but had been in a long commercial slump. As he was being led around the lot, someone pointed to the animation building and said to him, "That's your problem."

"That's exactly true," he recalls. "So you go over to that building and look inside and say how big a problem is it and how do we fix it? Well, it was a big problem, and I didn't know anything about the business, so that was a tremendous learning curve for me. I wasn't a student of animation, I didn't really know anything about it, I didn't understand how these movies were made."

Bottom line: He turned the place around, generating hit after hit. And when he left 10 years later to start DreamWorks, he brought along a lot of expertise, and some new ideas.

"One of the things I really admired about Walt Disney is that he had a very clear mission statement," explains Katzenberg. "Walt said, 'I make movies for children, and the child that exists in each of us.' And that's very true to what and how he made these films. He made them for children, and he then made sure that they appealed to the child in the adult. When I left Disney, I wanted to do something very different, that would be distinctive from that, where we would have our own mission statement, and would find our own style. So if you look at the movies over the years — 'Shrek' is a very irreverent fractured fairy tale. But it was made on a basis to work for an adult audience. And then we made sure that it didn't go over the kids' heads.

"In this day and age, very little goes over kids' heads," he adds. "They're very smart. They're instinctual and sophisticated, they understand nuance and irony and parody and satire. They may not be able to understand what the words, themselves, mean. But they get it in the context of storytelling. So if the goal of 'Shrek' was to make an audience laugh, the goal of 'Spirit' was to make an audience cheer."

Katzenberg has had the chance to cheer his own box office record, with hits like "Three Men and a Baby" and "Beauty and the Beast." But he's also overseen production of dismal performances from films such as "The Road to El Dorado" and "Cabin Boy." Right now, just like every other producer with a film coming out, he's wondering and worrying about how it will do.

"It's always high anxiety, no matter what," he says candidly. " 'Spirit' is a real labor of love. We set out to make something very different, and I think we did. But because it's new and different, it's also riskier. The thing that is remarkable about the movie business is you never know; you could have asked me how I felt this time last year, just before 'Shrek' came out. I might not have had quite the same level of anxiety, because in addition to everything else, you now have 'Spider-Man' and 'Star Wars' sort of vacuuming up the marketplace at the same time. We'll have to compete in a really tough market."

But is Katzenberg concerned about "Lilo & Stitch," the Disney animated feature being released on June 21?

"No, they come out a month after us," he says calmly. "People always ask about the competition, but we don't actually compete. 'Spirit's' success or failure will not be impacted by how well 'Lilo & Stitch' does or doesn't do. And vice versa. So I wish them well. I'm rooting for them."

Katzenberg says it's good news when any animated film becomes a blockbuster.

"The more these movies succeed," he says, "the more it expands the market, the more the moviegoers look forward to these films."

"Spirit: Stallion of the Cimarron" opens nationally on May 24.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, MAY 22

A full moon is building up and affects this period. Resolve to channel high energy constructively. Although this is not a favorable time for beginning important projects, it is great for catching up on jobs that have been left hanging and finishing them. You may see things in a new light and find fresh inspiration. Go with your creative side; follow your intuition. Plan a romantic evening with the love in your life.

THURSDAY, MAY 23

The Libra moon continues active travel until 7:39 p.m. Partnership issues may take precedence. Instead of establishing new friendships, this is a time to patch up relationships that have broken down. Open the doors to a higher level of communication. Plan a quiet evening. The moon enters Scorpio at 9:38 p.m. Spend time alone. Meditate for inner peace and vision.

FRIDAY, MAY 24

Potent planetary influences are in effect throughout the weekend. Stop, look and listen. A Scorpio moon today and tomorrow generates a serious, intense mood. In addition, Saturn opposes Pluto, the planetary ruler of Scorpio. And a lunar eclipse/full moon continues to build. You can make the greatest gains on an inner, spiritual level. Reassess your values and set new goals. Open your heart to higher visions.

SATURDAY, MAY 25

Planetary action runs fast and furious. This is a day that can go either way; you can experience dramatic breakthroughs or breakdowns. Stress management is important. Avoid getting caught up in situations you have no control over. Go with the flow. The Scorpio moon becomes inactive at 9:20 p.m., when it aligns with unpredictable Uranus. Saturn opposes Pluto at 10:33 p.m., 17-degrees of Gemini/Sagittarius. The last phase of the full moon buildup begins at 11:20 p.m., when the moon enters Sagittarius.

SUNDAY, MAY 26

Wake up in a good mood. Remain calm no matter what is happening around you. The lunar eclipse/full moon culminates at 7:51 a.m., 5-degrees of the sign Sagittarius. The moon also opposes retrograde Mercury at 9:51 a.m. In addition, an alignment of Mars and Uranus urges you to give others plenty of freedom and space. Don't force issues. An applying alignment of the sun and retrograde Mercury may shed new light on situations that have been troubling you.

MONDAY, MAY 27

Storm clouds begin to move out today. Treat yourself to a day of leisure; rest, relax and unwind. The Sagittarius moon urges you to be more optimistic, easygoing. Get back in the swing of favorite sports. Spend quality time with friends and family.

TUESDAY, MAY 28

This is a great day to get things done. Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda. Others may be grouchy, pessimistic. Don't waste your time. The Sagittarius moon becomes inactive at 2:39 a.m., when it opposes Mars. At 2:54 a.m. a pragmatic Capricorn moon takes over. Mars moves into Cancer at 7:43 a.m., remaining there until July 13. Plan to work or study late into the evening, especially if it's something you have put off for a while.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 29

The Capricorn moon opposes Jupiter at 7:46 a.m. and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. Zero in on jobs that need to be redone, repaired and finish old business. You can be most productive. Although this is not a favorable time for launching new business ventures, it is ideal for researching and reviewing your options.

Skip Day goes awry

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If luck is something you can run out of then the Cohasset High School senior class had better watch out.

Two incidents last week could have turned into tragedies, but luckily the youths involved escaped without serious injury or death.

Friday was "Senior Skip Day" — which is not condoned by the school — but, nevertheless, was likely the reason for seniors to celebrate with an underage drinking party at Bassing Beach the night before. Although the sequence of events isn't completely clear, what is clear is one of the occupants of a small boat that capsized in the harbor a few minutes past midnight nearly drowned.

The incident prompted Police Chief Robert Jackson to visit the high school Friday where he told the administration police would arrest any youths involved in alcohol-related incidences through graduation day. (In lieu of arrests, police have the option to issue summonses. In that case the youth must appear in court where he or she is held accountable, but can be put directly into a diversion program without having being arrested and booked at the station).

Then at 1 p.m. Friday, a senior was driving a 1988 Porsche on a

Somewhere between Illinois and Florida – a little seaside town in Massachusetts — heard a message, which explained how Memorial Days will never be the same.

The 50 state flags and one for the District of Columbia, along with Old Glory and the POW/MIA flag form the perimeter around Veterans Memorial Park at the harbor, which was glistening under blue skies on Monday.

But at the podium sandwiched between the flags of the Land of Lincoln and the Sunshine State, after a morning of remembrances at the town cemeteries, one of Cohasset's own – who now makes his home outside Washington, D.C. in Virginia – so eloquently "told it like it is."

"The events of Sept. 11 add a dramatic backdrop and significance to today's solemn remembrance of these American patriots whose names are arrayed on the wall behind me and their selfless service to the armed forces of our country," said CHS 1971 graduate, Lt. Ted Macklin, United States Navy (retired), referring to the veterans honor rolls at the park.

Arrows to help traffic at dangerous corner

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

There will soon be new light shed on one of the most dangerous intersections in Cohasset.

The intersection of Route 3A and Beechwood Street will be getting a makeover after complaints from town officials prompted MassHighway to examine the issue.

Bernard McCourt, district highway director for MassHighway, said he reviewed the concerns from the town and decided to take action. He said even though the intersection is at the state average for crashes per year — significant worry from the town prompted him to make the necessary changes.

The new light will involve a left turning arrow that McCourt said should reduce any conflict for turning vehicles. The northbound traffic on Route 3A will be allowed to move first with left-turning vehicles being protected under a green arrow. Following that, both north- and southbound traffic will be able to proceed straight through the intersection followed by southbound traffic being granted a left-turning arrow.

"I applaud the state for taking action on this," said Police Chief Robert Jackson. "It's the worst intersection in town and anything we do to address it, is great."

Selectmen thanked both state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, for their involvement with the process.

"We've needed this for some time," said Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan.

Hedlund said he talked with the commissioner of MassHighway and asked him to take a look at the intersection.

Old establishment, new name

No longer Kimball's

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Cohasset is changing with the times. The village will have a new look in a couple years, and both the common and the harbor could experience a makeover down the road. However, there will be one landmark that will change much sooner.

Kimball's by the Sea has undergone a name change and is now called the Cohasset Harbor Inn. While the signs haven't been replaced yet the new moniker for the complex has already taken effect.

Kathleen Janson, the director of sales and marketing for the resort, said the combination inn and restaurant were well received in Cohasset but were little known outside of town.

"To attract more people we wanted to let people know with our name who we are and where we are located," she said. "This name is much more descriptive."

However at least one group, the Friends of the Harbor, is concerned that any plans to increase tourism in Cohasset will exacerbate the parking situation.

"They said they're going to offer a spot that's less crowded than the Cape," one concerned resident said. "But now Cohasset is going to become just as crowded."

Along with the changing its name, the Cohasset Harbor Resort – that includes the inn — has also added some business partners in town. In an effort to offer more amenities to customers, the resort has partnered with a few local business.

Adamo Day Spa in Cohasset and the Widow's Walk Golf Course in Scituate are just two entities that also hope to lure out-of-towners.

"We wanted to be involved with all these businesses so our guests can take advantage of the entire area," Janson said.

Joanne Ilacqua, owner of Adamo Day Spa in the village, said she was happy to join forces with the resort. Ilacqua said she already works with other hotels in town and this was a natural fit.

"It's to our advantage to join with the resort," she said. "It will give us an opportunity for more business."

The spa will offer some in-room service including massages and limited body treatment. The spa will also provide bridal make-up for wedding parties.

"We are trying to offer all the services one would find at a resort spa," Ilacqua said. "People who are traveling will find it really fantastic."

Kimball's by the Sea is changing its long-time name, as shown in this 1980s file photo. The inn is now called the Cohasset Harbor Inn and is part of Cohasset Harbor Resort that also includes Atlantica and the Olde Salt House.

The Cohasset Harbor Resort will provide transportation to the spa and once there, guests will be able to enjoy more services including couple's massages and full-body treatment.

> "To attract more people we wanted to let people know with our name who we are and where we are located."
> — Kathleen Janson, Cohasset Harbor Resort

Janson added the only on-site facility the resort currently offers is an indoor swimming pool, and felt it needed to add more.

"This way our guests can enjoy a day the spa or a round of golf with transportation provided by us," she said.

The resort will also offer fishing charters arranged for local trolling and deep-sea fishing. Local captains Peter Flaherty and Mike Bartlett will take guests on fishing trips.

Flaherty, owner of Bass is my Business and Business is Good, said he partnered with the resort in order to offer an fishing experience to those who may otherwise not be able to go on a charter. His business boasts both half- and full-day charters and centers around the Minot Light and the rocky ledges of the shore. On his 19-foot boat customers have a chance to fish for striped bass, bluefish, flounder and cod.

"We have a good time out there," he said. "There's a lot of fishing that goes on."

Bartlett, whose Orvis-endorsed fly-fishing business B-Fast Charters runs out of many ports on the South Shore, said he's been recommending the resort to people for six years. He runs six-hour trips for two people.

"It's a great introduction to fly-fishing and also provides a great outing for more accomplished fishermen," Bartlett said.

Cohasset Harbor Resort also offers beach packages to guests for an opportunity to sun on Sandy Beach. As with its other partnerships, the resort will offer transportation to the beach.

The resort includes a 55-room inn, banquet facilities and function rooms all with harbor views accommodating groups from five to 600 people. The complex also has two restaurants, Atlantica and the Olde Salt House.

Antsy situation shouldn't make parents nervous

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

With the school year winding down there are many little annoyances that students associate with the end of the term. There are test to take, papers to write, and final projects to complete. However, the school administration is making sure at least one pesky issue will be eliminated.

The school, which has recently received complaints of ant activity in certain classrooms at the Osgood School, will have the building sprayed the weekend of May 31.

However, Principal Janet Sheehan said this is not a big concern.

"As long as schools have been in existence there have been ants," she said. "This is your common, everyday problem."

> "As long as schools have been in existence there have been ants. This is your common, everyday problem."
> — Janet Sheehan, Osgood principal

The school has hired Ecolab. Inc., which will be charged with eliminating the problem. The company plans to spray the exterior of the building along with a procedure called interior baiting, which is a low-exposure application technique. The baits are often used in schools because the treatment does not easily produce any airborne residue because it is enclosed in plastic casing.

"It will be out of reach and out of sight," Sheehan said. "No one will even know they're there."

Because of the Children's Protection Act of 2000, the school is now required to send home a letter to all parents informing them of the application. The Massachusetts Pesticide Control Act requires all parties affiliated with the school to also receive a statement from the Department of Food and Agriculture.

All employees of the Osgood school will also be notified in accordance with regulations. Attached to the letter is a consumer information bulletin and a chemical specific fact sheet.

"Because of the new laws we have certain procedures we have to follow," Sheehan said. "In the past, this wouldn't have been an issue."

The information packet from the DFA addresses various question parents may have concerning the health risks associated with spraying a building.

According to the department, all pesticides must be treated with caution. The chemicals which are designed to target specific pest, whether it be insects or weeds, may also be harmful to humans.

For safety guidelines, the DFA offers various general suggestions that homeowners who are planning pesticide applications might find useful.

For outdoor applications:

- be familiar with the small yellow signs that applicators are required to post when a pesticide is applied outdoors to turf. Stay off the field unit the flags are removed
- if you are sensitive to chemicals, avoid the area of pesticide application for 72 hours.
- ensure that pets are kept away from the area of pesticide application.

For indoor applications:

- cover or refrigerate edible products
- remove or cover toys, clothes, and bedding from areas to be treated
- remove pets including their food and water bowls and toys form the are to be treated
- ventilate as much as possible, during and following an indoor pesticide application
- don't walk on treated areas and carpets until completely dry

For more information about pesticides you can visit the Pesticide Bureau's Web site at www.massdfa.org/pesticides or call at 617-626-1781.

For any questions concerning the treatment at the school Sheehan encourages parents to call 781-383-6117.

dangerous stretch of Jerusalem Road at "a high rate of speed (40-50 mph in a 25 mph zone)," police said. The 18-year-old driver lost control of the two-seat sports car, which left the roadway, flipped over onto its side and crashed into a stone retaining wall after leaving a trail of 80 feet of skid marks. Neither the driver, nor his passenger, were seriously injured although they were transported to South Shore Hospital by ambulance where they were treated and released.

Middle-high school Principal Michael Jones said school officials got wind ahead of time a "skip day" was in the planning and told the seniors they should come to school. But despite that message, only 10-11 seniors came to school Friday out of a possible 81. A few had legitimate excuses, which were followed through with phone calls to parents, he said.

"We made is absolutely clear this is not an acceptable practice," Jones said about skip day.

In the boating mishap, police and firefighters responded to the call which came from a cell phone saying a youth was in trouble near the sailing club at 12:08 a.m. Friday. Apparently six teenagers were on their way back from Bassing Beach when the small boat capsized. One of the male occupants was under the water for a time but was pulled to the dock by the others — one of whom administered mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.

Some of the youths smelled of alcohol, and evidence found at the scene the following day also confirmed that an under-age drinking party had occurred, said police who estimate as many as 40 high school students were on Bassing Beach that night.

But Chief Jackson said the officers at the scene were dealing with a medical emergency and not concerned with making arrests at the time. He said police, who were tied up with a missing person case in Wompatuck State Park, did not know about the underage drinking party until the emergency phone call.

Police say a CHS senior lost control of his Porsche along Jerusalem Road last Friday.

Paramedic Rick Covino said emergency personnel insured the victim an adequate airway and managed his hypothermia. Three other teenagers with signs of hypothermia were also transported to the hospital, where they were treated and released. The drowning victim was admitted to the hospital but was back in school Tuesday.

"There could have easily been six fatalities," Covino said.

Also assisting at the scene were paramedic Lisa Morrison and EMTs Frank Mahoney and James Curley.

Emergency workers also tried to make sure everyone was accounted for. The tide was about half-way out at that time, and students reported of having had to swim ashore.

Chief Jackson said he hopes the weekend is not a sign of things to come.

"Obviously the senior class made some pretty poor decisions over the weekend," he said. "Hopefully, they'll learn from some of their mistakes."

Jones, the middle-high school principal, said the seniors who took Friday off without an excuse will be required to attend school this Thursday (Wednesday was to be the last day) and attend an end-of-school meeting on Friday, instead of Wednesday afternoon as planned. At the end-of-school meeting the graduation schedule is ironed out.

He agreed with Jackson that the seniors made some bad decisions.

"We're very gratified that no one got seriously hurt. There were bad decisions made but I'm told there were also some heroic acts," he said about the seniors who pulled their classmate out of the water and tried to save him.

Jones said the staff would be talking to some individuals and the class about being careful.

"Yes, we'll try that again," he said, adding the school talked to the seniors Thursday when rumors about skip day surfaced. "We'll try to impress upon them to take care of themselves – and to do so safely and responsibly."

Arrows to help traffic at dangerous corner

relationships in order to get things done," Hedlund said. "I'm glad this intersection will be much safer shortly."

Bradley said he was happy MassHighway decided to undertake the project.

"It was critical to reconfigure the intersection," he said. "It has been a problem for years."

The new operation will require the installation of additional signal heads, more wiring and adjustments to the timing and sequence program in the controller unit.

The Structural Engineering Section of MassHighway conducted an investigation of the equipment and deemed it was structurally sound enough to support a heavier light. There was originally a concern that the existing mast arms — the structures which hold up the light heads — wouldn't be able to handle the additional loading. This turned out to not be the case.

McCourt said the department is currently ordering the necessary materials to make the conversion and expects the change to be completed before the end of the summer.

One of the reasons MassHighway listened to the town's request for a resolution to the precarious intersection was a study conducted by the Boston Metropolitan Planning Organization. The study revealed that from 1997-1999, there were 29 accidents at the intersection. This is an average of 9.7 a year or 1.28 per million vehicles, well above the state average of .89 per million vehicles for a signalized intersection.

More than 40 percent of the accidents at the intersection involved personal injury including one fatality in 1997.

"Route 3A carries heavy through volume in both directions; it is difficult for the northbound and southbound left-turning traffic to find a gap," the report stated. "In some cases drivers may miscalculate acceptable gaps and in other times, out of frustration, drivers may try to force themselves into the through traffic."

Arrows at the lights on 3A at Beechwood Street should make the intersection safer, officials say.

Collie is on the case of geese elimination

Milliken field is all 'fowled' up

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

There's a new enforcer in Cohasset though it doesn't boast a police officer's or firefighter's badge. It doesn't sit on the Board of Selectmen and doesn't offer legal advice to the town.

The newest addition to fighting a foul problem in Cohasset stands barely over two feet tall and weighs about 40 pounds.

Zinger, a border collie living off King Street, has been hired to solve the increasing amount geese feces deposited on a youth playing field.

"You need to make the geese feel they aren't welcomed."
— Judy St. Peter, Zinger's owner

Town Manager Mark Haddad requested Zinger's service to try and eliminate geese, and therefore their excrement, from Milliken field.

Judy St. Peter, owner and trainer of Zinger, said the geese population in Cohasset, which has grown exponentially in the last few years, is out of control. From Milliken Field and the town common to various driveways in town, the effects of the geese can be seen everywhere.

"It doesn't take long to see how horrendous the problem is," St. Peter said.

The animals, which can average one pound of feces per day, have been plaguing the town for some time.

Zinger, who has been trained in the art of herding, visits the field each day at 7 a.m. to chase the animals away. St. Peter said it is a long process.

"You need to make the geese feel they aren't welcomed," she said. "It could take months of going every day but eventually, they'll learn."

Zinger doesn't attack the geese, he simply chases them out of the area. St. Peter said she'll go every morning until she sees the problem eliminated.

Although the problem on Milliken field will no doubt be cleared up by the border collie's efforts, Zinger was purchased in an effort to curb the effects of the geese in the private sector.

Zinger is helping to keep Milliken Field geese free.

St. Peter said her and abutters' driveways were often covered in feces.

"It was disgusting," she said. "We'd step in it, it was tracked into the house, it was everywhere."

After researching solutions to St. Peter came across a Web site that encouraged the use of dogs to chase the pests out of an area.

"We put our heads together and came to the conclusion that we couldn't put up with it any longer," she said. "Something needed to be done."

St. Peter who owns two other dogs, Roxy a Boxer and Xena a Pug, discovered border collies have been employed to stop geese problems on golf courses and public greens in other towns. This type of dog is often used in such situations because it has a high energy level and is quite resilient.

St. Peter bought Zinger, who has a fine lineage, and took the puppy to a farm in Middleboro to train on live stock. She said Zinger had a lot to learn.

"He was very shy and near the bottom of the class when we started," she said. "It was distressing at first."

Four firms, one contract

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

One after another, the four groups paraded into the selectmen's office. In an effort to sway the board to hire their firm, the finalists for procuring the contract for Village Improvements Design and Construction Plans presented their cases Tuesday night,

After hearing all of the proposals, a weary board of selectmen decided it needed a few more days before awarding the contract. From Power Point presentations, to engineering designs and streetscape improvements — the selectmen have plenty to think about.

Waterfield Design Group was the first company to take the limelight.

Craig Miller, who would be the project manager for the group, said the company is a small intimate one that operates as a team. He said the two most important aspects of the project were the streetscape designs and the balancing of the various projects the town will be undertaking..

"We see a lot of potential in this project," he said. "There's a real synergy that exists between all the options available to the town."

Miller emphasized the coordination of the projects and presented a detailed plan with how he felt they would come together. There are several different plans the town needs to take care of, ranging from the James Brook Flood Control project, to the village improvements.

"We want to make sure everything flows into one another," Miller said. "Sometimes a project can overwhelm a community and overrun merchants and we'll make sure that doesn't happen."

Waterfield has worked with the MBTA in the past and some felt that gave his firm an edge.

"One of the reasons you're here is because of your relationship with the MBTA," said Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Karen Fitzgerald, the chief design architect for the firm, said the material chosen for the village should reflect the pedestrian nature of the area.

"We realize how beautiful the village is and how much character it has," she said. "We aim to keep it that way."

The second firm to make a presentation was Earthtech, Inc. Brian Murray, who would be the program manager and project manager, said when a town is looking at multiple projects it's important to have one person as a point man.

"The biggest construction issue is communication with residents and merchants," he said. "It's very important to us to keep that avenue open."

The group focused on the village improvements and said that's were its concerns lay.

Tamar Zimmerman, the landscape architect for the group, said she wanted to improve the area, but not change its essence.

"Our vision is to make the town a place where the streets are pleasant and safe and clear," she said. "We're not going to inundate the area with new stuff that would hurt its character."

Selectmen Ronnie McMorris liked Earthtech's approach.

"I think they'd be the best for the community," she said. "I like how they looked at the project as being married to the community."

Pressley/Bryan Associates was the third firm to make its bid for the contract. The group was the first to use a Power Point presentation which was quite impressive. The firm showed pictures of the current conditions of the area, then redisplayed them overlay with new sidewalk material and street furniture.

Bill Pressley gave the presentation for the group and explained to the board similar assignments the firm has done in Andover and New Bedford.

"With our experience we are well qualified to take on this project," he said. "We will represent the best interests of the community."

The firm listed its construction issues as minimizing disruptions to merchants, maintaining parking in the village while construction is happening, and controlling dust that can sometimes be a serious problem.

"Our approach is to look into the smallest details and make sure they're important," Pressley said. "We take everything into consideration."

The last firm to present, Coler and Colantonio, concentrated more on the engineering aspects of the project and less on the village improvements. The firm felt the design for the village has already been about 80 percent completed and the most important aspect of the project was now the coordination.

The firm detailed its past accomplishments in Norfolk Town Center which they described as almost an identical project to the Cohasset one.

"I feel like we've already done this," said Ken Caputo, who would be the project manager for the firm.

C and C also had a different approach from the other firms saying it would take 18-24 months to complete the project rather than the 12 months most the others detailed.

"We could do it sooner but it's a bigger headache then it's worth," Caputo said. "The bottom line is we'll keep businesses open and the village functioning."

After hearing the four proposals the selectmen debated the merits of each until it was clear more time was needed. The discussion was tabled till Tuesday because the board felt it needed to organized their thoughts on the matter.

"We really don't know what we want," said Selectmen Merle Brown.

Work on the village could start the spring of 2003. The estimated $2-1/4 million revitalization project could be paid for with no direct cost to Cohasset taxpayers.

The $1.5 million Public Works Economic Development Grant along with the $169,000 transportation enhancement grant, which will be used for the sidewalk on South Main Street in front of St. Stephen's Church, will pick up most of the tab.

The MBTA will pay to reconstruct the town parking lot and the Ripley Road intersection by the South Shore Art Center in the village as part of the Greenbush train restoration project.

The Cohasset Swim Center also has registrations out there for the memberships at the Town pool, please make sure to fill them out and return them so that you can use the pool as soon as it opens!

I am hoping that many of you were able to take part in or watch this past Monday's Memorial Day parade and ceremony's. The turnout was amazing at all stops along the route and it truly was touching to see and hear all the speeches and to see even the youngest in our town show their respects. The honor given to all the men and women who have died or fought in honor of our country and to all who continue to do so is huge. As our lives change and the way of living changes on a daily basis, we are comforted in knowing of the strength given to our country by these men and women who defend on a regular basis and to the families of these courageous people, our hearts go out to you.

Holly Hill hooks up with community

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Holly Hill Farm, located at 236 Jerusalem Road, boasts 140 acres on which everything from lettuce and onions to carrots and potatoes are grown.

The farm, which also has a variety of animals including two goats, a horse, chickens, dogs and rabbits, has been a part of the White family for generations. Its current owner Frank White is trying to develop a new mission for the place.

"We thought a good way of involving the public was through education," White said. "We want to make it as accessible as possible."

The farm has established itself as a non-profit organization and has stopped selling its produce wholesale. It started the Friends of Holly Hill Farm, Inc. whose mission is "to develop and support educational resources and programs at the farm for use by educational institutions and citizens of Cohasset and surrounding towns."

"They can get connected with the natural world out here in a way they can't in a classroom setting,"
— Kate Sullivan, farm manager

Holly Hill's board of directors also hopes to install some of the values associated with organic farming to schoolchildren. It currently helps educate students from both the South Shore Charter School in Hull and the Deer Hill School about farming, and will be starting a semester program with the high school in the fall.

"They can get connected with the natural world out here in a way they can't in a classroom setting," said Kate Sullivan, farm manager and coordinator of community and education programs. "When the kids come out here you can see it on their faces, they're really excited and curious."

Depending on the age of the children, Sullivan has them work on a variety of projects. From weeding and harvesting to painting and taking care of the animals, the students contribute to almost all aspects of being a farmer.

"We introduce them to farming," Sullivan said.

Along with the student programs, Holly Hill Farm is also attempting to involve local adults. The farm plans to offer workshops for adults including one in July run by the Massachusetts Agricultural in the Classroom program.

"We want the town to see us a big resource," Frank White said. "It's learning about safe food and the environment that produces it."

The Whites also hope to increase community involvement with the farm because given the relative small size of the farm it will struggle to survive financially if it depends solely on vegetable and flower production. The Whites said creating a relationship with the community and "growing" students has proved to be a sound option to for other small farms.

Another change the farm is undergoing is converting to an establishment that grows all of its produce organically.

Tim Ashton, who is one of the managers and program coordinators for the program, said organic farming is much better for both the environment and the consumer. As opposed to current farming practices organic farming concentrates on a diversity of crops and doesn't use pesticides or fertilizers.

"We try to mimic a forest environment," Ashton said. "It's a more pro-active approach and is much more natural."

Jean White, wife of Frank and vice chairman on the board of directors, also lauded organic farming.

"The effects of using chemicals on crops has yet to be seen," she said. "This way a consumer doesn't have to worry about it."

The Whites are encouraging all residents to become "friends" of the farm which they believe will help ensure the farm not only provides vegetables, flowers and herbs to the town but also offers educational programs and activities.

Residents can start sampling the produce grown on the farm on June 8 when the farm stand will open. It will continue to offer fresh crops every Tuesday and Saturday from 10 a.m. 4 p.m. For more information, the Whites at 781-383-6965.

OPINION

Remembering 9-11

This Memorial Day we pay tribute to those Cohasset soldiers who made the supreme sacrifice for our freedom.

Their sacrifice sears even deeper into our souls this year when we think about how their blood spared us from bloodshed on our soil.

Eighty years ago, our doughboys stood shoulder to shoulder, a human chain that stopped the tide of tyranny from touching our shore.

Sixty years ago, Kilroy was there so that war never came here.

Fifty years ago and thirty years ago, they gave their lives on the other side of the world in Korea and Vietnam so that we would never see what we saw September 11.

Long after these brave men were laid to rest, we were attacked by an unseen enemy, and 3,000 civilians were killed on the land they protected with their lives.

What would they think if they looked down and saw the indelible images imprinted on our minds which we will carry forever to remind us of the horror of the September 11 terrorist attack?

What would they think if they saw those two hijacked planes smashing into the World Trade Center in New York City and demolishing it. the third plane tearing into the Pentagon in Washington, and the fourth plummeting into the field in Pennsylvania?

What would they think if they saw how the nation tried to wash off the horror in a sea of red, white, and blue?

What would they think if they saw the smoke on one tower and the fireball on the other as the World Trade Center was hit with jet planes which became flying bombs?

What would they think if they saw the employees slowly snaking their way down the narrow staircase to safety, the rush to freedom by the lucky ones?

The images are indelible.

The muggers in New York jails asking for the Red Cross so they could donate blood.

The police officer who plummeted with the building's 89th floor and walked away.

The cell phone calls from the planes and the World Trade Center.

The son assuring his mother he loved her.

The reporter who called her husband collect to tell him the plane had been hijacked.

The fiancé who told his future wife, "Live for me."

The CEO of the company who lost all 700 employees, including his own brother, and kept stopping survivors on the street asking what floor they were on until the survivors stopped coming.

The group of firefighters who jumped into a subway to escape flying debris, dug themselves out, returned to the Trade Center, and were never heard from again.

The parents who had a child at the World Trade Center and a child at the Pentagon. Both survived.

The mayor of New York on his hands and knees scratching through the rubble for survivors.

The rescue of two firefighters in a crevice. "Good job, jakes," one said.

The passenger who called a family member from the hijacked Philadelphia plane saying that he and two other passengers were going to "do something." They did. The plane slammed into a field, instead of the White House.

The passport of one of the hijackers found intact among the debris.

The public address system in Tower 2 telling people they could go back to work.

The rescue workers caked with soot.

The towers crumbling like sand castles.

The president vowing justice amidst the rubble.

The vice president saying we face a war like no other, which will be fought in dark alleys and mountain caves with our intelligence relying on secrets told to the most unsavory of characters.

The secretary of state saying this war on terrorism will take a long time.

The young father with his wife and child calling his mother from one of the doomed planes.

"Don't worry about us. It's going to be fast," he said.

But not for us.

We now live in terrifying uncertainty.

We appreciate ever so much more this year those heroes of the last century who made sure no blood was shed upon our land.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Little League thanks Red Lion

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the Cohasset Little League, I would like to extend our thanks and appreciation to the Red Lion Inn for providing coffee, juice, bagels, Danish pastries, and an assortment of other delicious breakfast foods to our players, coaches and parents who gathered downtown before the beginning of the Little League Parade to Barnes Field.

As a result of the Red Lion Inn's generosity and demonstration of community spirit, we had a great beginning for our 52nd Annual Little League Parade and Opening Day Ceremonies.

Red Lion Inn overdevelopment

TO THE EDITOR:

The old Red Lion was an historic structure and consisted of a small dining room and bar with small guestrooms upstairs that shared a bath. It has now more than doubled in size and contains a large dining room, bar, jazz club, and 15 suites with 15 baths. The old Lilac House had a small business located on the first floor, with two apartments above. It too has more than doubled in size and now houses a restaurant, bakery, function hall and an apartment.

The special permit to construct the function hall barn at the Red Lion Inn states that the capacity was to be about 150 people. The reality is that The Red Lion Inn has advertised the barn capacity at 400 people and functions for 400 people have been held there. The function hall in the Lilac House was to be "a small function room for about 80 people," according to the special permit. It has been advertised for 150 people.

Also, because the inn is within 500 feet of the town parking lot, the Inn was not required to provide function parking. There were to be 22 parking spaces, to be reserved for guests of the inn only. The proposed 50 or 60 employees (now approximately 100) would park in "some off street area other than the municipal lot." The permit refers to the municipal lot as having about 330 spaces, while the reality is that the municipal lot has approximately 160 spaces and is for the use of the entire village, not just the guests at the inn.

If a neighbor in a residential area wants to construct parking spaces for more than five cars, they must keep them 25 feet from the lot line. We were not afforded this consideration. Instead of the promised 22 spaces for guests of the inn, there is a large gravel parking lot adjacent to our property, separated only by a fence. We now have boisterous partygoers congregating outside in the parking area, smoking and drinking very late at night. The noise of hundreds of function hall guests leaving the facilities at 1 a.m. is very disturbing. Also, the area in front of our home is used as a loading and delivery area. Trucks frequently double-park or block our driveway. The engines are left idling and the diesel fumes waft into our home.

An additional 36 rooms/suites and baths will only exacerbate these capacity, parking, and noise problems. The plan to put in underground parking is ludicrous. An enormous amount of ledge and trees were removed to accommodate the first expansion. The blasting and jack hammering went on for months. We had a seismograph located outside our kitchen door for weeks. Our house was built in 1755 and cannot bear further punishment. There is no buffer zone between the Red Lion Inn and our home.

We have written letters and had meetings with the Board of Selectmen, planning and zoning boards, the town manager and building inspector regarding these issues, all to no avail.

During the planning process, we attended every meeting and a complete set of plans were never submitted. We are still waiting to see the as-built plans. We understand that the building inspector has received them.

We love the village and have made it our home for 16 years. It was essentially unchanged for centuries. I hope, that other people who want to protect our village from overdevelopment will attend the next planning and zoning board meetings regarding these issues.

Safe space is needed at CMHS

TO THE EDITOR:

I nearly cried upon reading the article entitled "CMHS students get lesson on diversity." I used to think that the town's Diversity Committee was a joke because for so long, sexual orientation was not included in their agenda.

Educating students about this very sensitive topic is absolutely imperative — especially in a town as ignorant to these issues as I have found Cohasset to be.

I was one of those kids who could have been any face at CHS; however, I never had the courage to accept who I am until I went to college. During my time at CHS, homosexual slurs were commonplace, and I even witnessed a teacher use derogatory language and many others turn a blind eye to such remarks from students.

High school years are certainly not an easy time for teenagers, but being homosexual and in an intolerant and bigoted environment made things much harder and more painful for me. I appreciate the Committee and Dr. Gill's effort to bring sexual orientation out into the open. I only hope that this is merely the beginning of a continuous effort to provide a safe space for current and future students.

I ask that you allow me to remain anonymous, due to the nature of this letter.

A semi-recent CHS grad

Little Harbor's algae woes and us

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The board has received its usual complaints about the algae in Upper Little Harbor. These complaints come from many of the same people each year, almost every one of which (including this writer) has in some way contributed to the problem.

There are those who — owning several acres most of which is put in grass — hire a lawn-care company to "clean up the yard" and proceeds to place 80 pounds of fertilizer per acre on the lawn despite the fact that the EPA says that for soils like Cohasset's about 90 percent of the fertilizer is carried away in the ground water and ends up in the nearest water body.

Then, there's the land owner, who according to his neighbor has a straight pipe into a brook which drains into Little Harbor. Also, the homeowner who has been under an order to hook up to a tight tank for four years, and who hasn't because he's waiting for a sewer to come — in five years.

The builder who just tore down a house on Jerusalem Lane is doing his bit also. The next rain will carry all of the residue from his demolition (mostly sediments, and contents of the gardens and cesspool), unless he's broken the mercury ampules in each of the thermostats in the house, in which case, the mercury will get 'Memorial Day has added significance'

By Lt. Ted Macklin, U.S.N. (Ret.)
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Good afternoon, ladies and gentlemen, fellow veterans, citizens of Cohasset. Thank you for coming out today. It's an honor to be here to talk with you about the sacrifices made by those men, those sons of Cohasset, who made the supreme sacrifice as combat veterans of our armed forces in defense of freedom and liberty for the United States.

I want to recognize my fellow veterans, and the organizers of today's parade from the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars. I'd particularly like to thank Steve Wigmore, Commander of the George H. Mealy American Legion Post 118 who was kind enough to invite me to speak here today and participate in such a well-turned-out Memorial Day parade.

In the context of my remarks about Memorial Day, I shall talk about the urgent threat of terrorism facing the United States. The events of Sept. 11 add a dramatic backdrop and significance to today's solemn remembrance of these American patriots whose names are arrayed on the wall behind me, and their selfless service to the armed forces of our country.

I too am a son of Cohasset having graduated from Cohasset High School in 1971. Three short months later I was sworn into the U.S. Navy as a midshipman. The Vietnam War was raging during that period and the country was engaged in a great national debate about the efficacy of our nation's policy in southeast Asia—a debate which spread across the land, from Washington D.C. to our nation's college campuses—a debate brought home to all Americans as the entire nation mourned the loss of thousands of America's best and brightest on a faraway battlefield.

It was a terribly sad time, here in close-knit Cohasset as well; as the toll of those killed serving their country seemed to keep climbing. It was very difficult for us at Cohasset High School to grasp the meaning of what seemed like a steady stream of terrible news from the frontlines. We struggled to mourn with the brothers, sisters and cousins, our classmates, of those killed in Vietnam. And we struggled to make sense of their sacrifice. Great anguish spread through the town as we seemed to be honoring more and more military men from Cohasset killed in action. It seemed, at that time, that our hometown was paying a very high price for freedom.

But those courageous patriots, all of those men whose names are emblazoned for eternity on the Memorial War behind me—they knew something we students had yet to learn. They knew what the Cohasset veterans of the Great War and World War II, and the Korean War already knew:

- that when it comes time to defend freedom
- when it comes time to respond to the nation's call-to-arms
- when it comes time to be prepared to lay down your life in defense of the United States, Cohasset men and women are ready to serve, fight and die if necessary, to defend freedom and all that we hold so dear.

So how best to honor the memories of these intrepid men today? We've enjoyed a marvelous parade, the bands have played brilliantly, Old Glory is well turned-out throughout the town, we've placed laurels on the heroes' tombs, and we will remember them as we enjoy, with our friends and family, this beautiful, God-given day whose purpose is to reflect and remember those who have fallen in defense of our nation.

I humbly yet decisively submit for your consideration that we best honor them be grasping that Memorial Day will continue to take on added significance since the horrific terrorist attack of Sept. 11, 2001 and the follow-on bioterrorism anthrax attacks.

Everything changed that day.

The events of 9/11 and the sacrifice of those first responders, those heroic police and firefighters who gave their lives saving others, demand a transformation in our perception of warfare and how and where it is fought.

This new warfare is unlike the battles fought by the fallen Cohasset warriors whom we honor today. This new war—the war on terrorism—is being waged not only on foreign soil, but also in our own heartland, and in our cities and towns. While the Vietnam War seemed interminable—officially lasting more than 12 years—this new war will be far longer, perhaps even our version of Europe's One-Hundred-Years' War. And most disquieting: this war doesn't just target the military; it targets you, the citizens of America, in order to spread terror throughout the country in the hope of destroying our open, democratic way of life forever.

It also targets our society's critical infrastructure:

- by focusing on the transpiration industry—our airlines, trains and shipping
- it exploits our vast postal system—by mailing disease-ridden letters to the unsuspecting
- it aims at the heart of our financial system and our global trading lifeblood—by attacking the World Trade Center and shutting down Wall Street
- it threatens our energy supply backbone by threatening our hydroelectric and nuclear power generation facilities
- and it rattles our vital retailing industry with the ongoing threat of suicide bombers in our malls and shopping centers.

Vice-President Cheney calls it an "almost certainty" that we will be attacked again. The Director of the FBI, Robert Meuller says the next attack is "inevitable."

This inevitability is confounded by the strategy of our enemy—militant Islamic fundamentalism—which is characterized by a patient willingness to wait perhaps months and years between attacks, to surprise us when our guard is down and we are lulled into complacency. It is just this complacent attitude that these heroes we honor today would alert us to, and which they would never abide. They would expect us as concerned Americans to soberly accept and swiftly absorb that a "new normalcy" and a "clear and present danger" exists in America today.

We best honor them by preparing America for the coming fight, by actively doing our part as individuals and families by being alert and aware to our ever-changing surroundings and circumstances, and by supporting not only our military, but also our uniformed, civilian first-responders as well. In this way, we can all contribute to the defense of America.

Having been engaged in the war on terrorism for over 20 years, whether in uniform as a Navy Seal Counter-Terrorist Commando, or in my current capacity as a director at the Office for Domestic Preparedness at the Department of Justice. I have learned that the nation cannot remain on "high alert" indefinitely; that we have to guard against paralyzing our freedoms. We must learn swiftly as a nation to strike a balance between the demands for public safety and our inalienable individual liberties.

Preventing or disrupting these attacks overseas, or intercepting and neutralizing the terrorists prior to their attacks is the President's number one goal; but if we cannot prevent or interrupt the next attack, we have to be prepared to respond properly in order to minimize loss of life and property. It is the first-responders of our nation—the police, firefighters, hazmat and emergency medical technicians and hospital providers who are on the front lines of this new war. They exemplify many of the same traits—bravery, courage, devotion to duty—as those we are remembering today. They too run to the sound of the guns.

As we recognize the sacrifice of these heroes, heroes of both foreign battlefields and the new front-lines in America's heartland, let's reflect on what Francis Scott Key wrote in 1814 at the Battle of Fort McHenry—in a verse of our national anthem:

"Oh say, does that star-spangled banner yet wave
O're the land of the free
And the home of the brave?"

Francis Scott Key clearly recognized that the United States would continue to be "the land of the free" only so long as it continues to be "the home of the brave."

When the roll is called, these brave men we remember today should now number in their hallowed ranks those 400-strong, first-responders of 9/11 who unselfishly gave their lives in defense of freedom.

It is both our privilege and duty to honor these military and civilian heroes killed on the frontlines of our nation's wars, and acknowledge that the front-lines are unfortunately being transformed to reflect not only overseas battlefields upon which these brave men, memorialized behind me, fought and died, and upon which soldiers, sailors, airmen and marines are fighting and dying this very day in the war on terrorism in Afghanistan.

But also the new, emerging battlefields in our homeland, cities and towns upon which our first-responders will surely, heroically and willingly lay down their lives so that others may live in peace.

So indeed, today is a day of solemn remembrance, it's also a day to celebrate their lives and the freedoms they enjoyed, and its a remembrance of the courage of some of America's bravest soldiers and uniformed citizens, and the gift of freedom their sacrifice continues to give us all.

Let me close with a poem by veteran John Maubry that should mean a great deal to all veterans, and which I believe puts voice to the heroes we honor today:

Eulogy For A Veteran

Do not stand at my grave and weep.
I am not there, I do not sleep.

I am a thousand winds that blow.
I am the diamond glints in snow.

I am the sunlight on ripened grain.
I am the gentle autumn rain.

When you awaken in the morning's hush,
I am the swift uplifting rush of quiet birds in circled flight,
I am the soft stars that shine at night.

Do not stand at my grave and cry,
I am not there, I did not die.

God bless these courageous men and women that we honor here today. God bless all of you. And God bless America.

Who's the real Deep Throat?

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Circle Monday, June 17, on your calendar. Lay in a supply of pop corn, nachos and Carlo Rossi paisano. Invite a few friends. Tune your computer to Salon.com.

That's the time and place when John Dean takes another whack at identifying Deep Throat, the insider who blew the whistle on Dick Nixon and his fun-loving gang's adventures in Watergate.

You remember Dean, don't you? He's the husband of the blonde bomber who sat behind him while he testified before Senator Sam Ervin's select committee and helped sink the good ship Nixon.

He's been this way before. Several times, as a matter of fact. The last time he ID'd the Secretary of State, Alexander Haig, as Deep Throat, the Washington Post's spy within the Nixon gang.

The significance of the June 17 date is that it is the 30th anniversary of the night when five men, employees of the Republican Committee to Reelect the President (known as CREEP), were arrested inside the Democratic National Committee office in the Watergate apartments.

Identifying Deep Throat has been a cottage industry in the nation's capital for nigh onto 30 years.

For those of you who came in late, Deep Throat was the name given to the man who fed information to the Post's Bob Woodward during clandestine meetings in a parking garage. Woodward has said he will not identify him until after his death or he gives his permission.

Identifying Deep Throat has been a cottage industry in the nation's capital for nigh onto 30 years but now it seems to be sweeping through the rest of the country.

Also due next month is a report called "A Finder's Guide to Deep Throat," by William Gaines, a journalist/professor who teaches investigative reporting at the University of Illinois.

For the past three years, his students have read every autobiography of everyone involved in Watergate and studied 16,000 pages of FBI reports to come up with seven likely candidates.

And Ron Kessler, in a new book called "Bureau: The Secret History of the FBI," reveals a former deputy director named Mark Felt to be Deep Throat. He's not one of Gaines' seven candidates. Dean says he's not his nominee. Woodward ain't talking.

Perhaps it is time that I, having read Woodward and Carl Bernstein's "All the President's Men," help you too take a crack at revealing the true identity of Deep Throat.

"The man's position in the Executive Branch was extremely sensitive. He had never told Woodward anything that was incorrect. Even the FBI didn't understand what was happening. (He made) veiled references to the CIA and national security which Woodward did not understand."

"Deep Throat was already there, smoking a cigarette." Aha, he smokes!

"Aware of his own weaknesses, he readily conceded his flaws. He was, incongruously, an incurable gossip, careful to label rumor for what it was, but fascinated by it. He knew too much literature too well and let the allurements of the past turn him away from his instincts.

"He could be rowdy, drink too much, overreach. He was not good at concealing his feelings, hardly ideal for a man in his position. Of late, he had expressed fear for the future of the executive branch, which he was in a unique position to observe."

"Deep Throat had access to information from the White House, Justice, the FBI and CRP. What he knew represented an aggregate of hard information flowing in an out of many stations."

And, oh, yes, in his last meeting with Woodward in a bar on the outskirts of Washington, Deep Throat drank scotch.

Now you know as much as I do. Go get 'em, tiger!

Celebrate Biodiversity Days in Massachusetts

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

What is biodiversity? The Ecological Society of America defines it as follows: "Short for biological diversity, biodiversity includes all organisms, species, and populations; the genetic variation among these; and all their complex assemblages of communities and ecosystems. It also refers to the interrelatedness of genes, species, and ecosystems and their interactions with the environment." The word "biodiversity" came into being in 1986 at a National Academy of Sciences meeting.

The most serious threats to biodiversity are loss and destruction of habitat and the introduction of non-native species, both plant and animal.

Scientists are unsure of the exact number, but it is estimated that there are between 1.5 and 1.8 million species worldwide that have been identified and named. It is also not known how many undiscovered species there are. The ocean floor needs much more exploration, and smaller organisms such as fungi, insects, and microbes are not as fully documented as animals or plants. There are many more field guides available for birds and mammals, or flowers and trees than for ants, lichen, or dragonflies, for instance.

Biodiversity is important because of all the interconnections between living organisms. The food chain connection is just one example. Pollination is another. We humans are dependent on biodiversity for our food, and for materials to keep us warm, and for building shelter. We also need plant diversity for medicines. The greater the variety of genetic material, the better the chance for species and populations to adapt successfully to changes in environmental conditions. Genetic diversity is also necessary for the evolution of new species.

The most serious threats to biodiversity are loss and destruction of habitat and the introduction of non-native species, both plant and animal. Pollution, climate change and improper management practices can also threaten biodiversity. Excesses in hunting and fishing cause declines and the eventual extinction of the species sought after. The majority of these threats are related to human activity. According to the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs (EOEA), Massachusetts is losing 44 acres of open space a day to residential, commercial, or industrial interests. 7 animal species have become extinct in Massachusetts in the past 300 years.

Extinction has always occurred naturally, just as evolution of new species has always occurred. The concern now is that species are becoming extinct at an estimated rate of 100 to 1000 times faster than before the arrival of the human race. To reverse this trend, we need to learn more about the variety of life and its ecosystems. Scientists need to share their knowledge with policy makers and policy makers need to listen. We all need to conserve more and work toward achieving the goal of more sustainable living.

The concept of Biodiversity Days was the brainchild of Peter Alden, a resident of Concord, Mass. He is the principal author of "National Audubon Society Field Guide to New England" and a leader of wildlife tours worldwide. He was well aware that many birders are daft enough to enjoy running around to see how many birds they can see in 24 hours. There are Big Days, Christmas Bird Counts, Bird-a-Thons etc. He thought that perhaps other types of naturalists could be persuaded to do something similar. If a list of all species encountered in a 24-hour period could be created, we would gain useful information about what plant, animal and fungal species are actually in this area. Increased awareness of the world around us is one way to encourage conservation and other practices to slow down destruction.

The first Biodiversity Day was held on July 4, 1998. The area covered was that around Walden Pond in Concord and Lincoln. Experts in all fields were invited, including Edward O. Wilson, a noted entomologist from Harvard University. 100 people in 42 groups looked for and kept lists of all visible (non-microscopic) flora, fauna and fungi. People even went into the water to find fish. The hope was to find 1000 species. The tally at the end of the day was 1904. The next day a moose unexpectedly wandered into Concord Center for a brief time, which would have raised the total by one, had it chosen the previous day to visit. The idea was to count numbers of species, not individuals. Any evidence of a species, such as the odor of a skunk, or an animal track, or even a roadkill counted.

Look out your window at home. What do you see? The diversity of life abounds as shown in this composite.

That first one-day local event has developed into a multi-day statewide event sponsored by the EOEA in partnership with a variety of non-profit organizations. Biodiversity Days 2002 will be held May 31 - June 3. There are some 15,000 species of plants and animals in Massachusetts that are large enough to see without benefit of a microscope. Coordinators in as many towns as possible have been designated to organize walks. People who are interested in participating should get in touch with the coordinator for their town. Dennis Peacock in Hingham can be reached at Crexcrexx@aol.com. Sally Avery in Cohasset can be reached at 781-383-6043. Results from previous Biodiversity Days can be found at <http://data.massgis.state.ma.us/Biodiversity/BrowsingBiodiv.htm>.

to the harbor in about three months. Otherwise, the debris will be burned at Rochester, the mercury will enter the air, and eventually end up in the swordfish, mackerel, and other fish on the not so Grand Banks.

Then, there are all the people who pile their grass clippings down by the shore where they will wash away. Since 1960, the Upper Little Harbor shoreline has moved inwards about 30 feet. At such a rate, it will have filled in completely in about 40 years. However the rate of introduction of nutrients into Little Harbor has increased radically, so maybe we'll all have an opportunity to see this interesting phenomenon occur during our lifetimes.

Memorial Day also honors 9-11 heroes

the Department of Justice in Washington, said the best way to honor fallen heroes is to grasp that Memorial Day will continue to take on added meaning since the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11 and the anthrax bio-terrorism in the weeks that followed.

He praised the firefighters and police, who gave their lives saving others on that tragic day, and said their sacrifice demanded "a transformation in our perception of warfare and how and where it is fought."

"This new warfare is unlike the battles fought by the fallen Cohasset warriors whom we honor today. This new war, the war on terrorism, is being waged not only on foreign soil but also in our own heartland, and in our cities and towns," he said.

Macklin went on to say most disquieting is the new war doesn't just target the military but American citizens and our society's infrastructure including transportation, postal, energy, retail and financial systems.

The challenge, he explained, is being prepared while striking a balance between the demands of public safety and individual liberties.

Macklin, whose parents live on Atlantic Avenue, said Francis Scott Key got it right when he wrote the "'land of the free' only so long as it continues to be the 'home of the brave.'"

He asked as Americans honor military and civilian heroes, they must acknowledge the front lines are being transformed to reflect not only overseas battlefields like Afghanistan but emerging battlefields in our cities an towns "where first responders will surely, heroically and willingly lay down their lives so that others may live in peace."

Macklin asked all to remember the heroes of Sept. 11 along with the many veterans of the nation's wars.

"When the roll is called, these brave men we remember today should number in their hallowed ranks those 400-strong first responders of 9-11 who unselfishly gave their lives in defense of freedom," he said.

The Cohasset observances drew a record crowd of some 1,500 people at the harbor. More than 100 veterans marched in the parade. Cohasset firefighters, who wore their dress uniforms, also marched. All were joined by members of the Women's Auxiliary of the American Legion, local bands, Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts and town officials.

The World War I Honor Roll was completed just in time for the day's events. Soon the names of the 199 Cohasset soldiers who served in the Civil War will be added. Plans are to add the Vietnam and Korean war honor rolls, as well. World War II and Mexican war honor rolls are complete.

American Legion Post Commander Steve Wigmore, who served as emcee at the harbor, said he was proud of every one of the veterans there.

Ralph Perroncello, commander of the VFW post, pointed out veterans of the "Big Deuce" (WWII) were getting on in years and only about a dozen could march this year.

The Rev. John Mulvehill of St. Anthony's Church asked for prayers that those who made the supreme sacrifice did not die in vain.

"(They stand as) silent witness that neither war nor terrorism will cloud this land," he said.

For complete text of Macklin's speech see page 8. Veterans interested in joining the VFW should call Perroncello at 781-383-0879, or the American Legion, 781-383-9657.

What kind of fish is on top of the Paul Pratt Library weathervane (usually) ?

By Lou Eaton
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The third volume of the Cohasset Town History is scheduled to become available in June and the Committee responsible for publication has thought to publish a few articles, courtesy of the Cohasset Mariner, about local history to stimulate interest in matters historical even though not related to the period of 1950 to 2000 covered by Volume III.

I thought to start today's vignette on a Cohasset Historical theme by asserting that most of the five or six-year-old kids who frequented the library could answer the question. "What's on top of the weathervane at the library," quickly enough, "A fish!". And then I would ask, "And what kind of a fish?" I bet most of them wouldn't know that the right answer, of course, is "a mackerel." And I wanted to use this as a lead-in to refresh your memories as to why it is a mackerel.

So I went down to the library just to take a look and make sure I was right and discovered that right now there is no fish on top of the weathervane. Not to worry, though. I was told it was safely in storage awaiting transfer to the op of the weathervane at the new library.

Anyhow, for 60 to 70 years in the 19th century, Cohasset was a major mackerel fishing port and at mid century there were up to 500 men and boys employed in the industry, including, as time went by, numerous immigrants from the Azores whose descendants now compromise a sizeable percentage of on present population.

In the 18th century and before, cod fishing, which had been carried on by the French, English and the Portuguese in the waters off the coasts of Northern New England and the Maritimes since the late 16th century, was the major fishing industry from our town. The schooners went to the Grand Banks, the Bay of Chaleur or Prince Edward Island in late April or May and stayed until mid September catching and salting or drying fish.

But according to Bigelow's "Narrative History," by 1837 the mackerel business had taken over and by 1840 cod fishing from Cohasset had dwindled to nearly nothing. The mackerel fishing could be done much nearer home port, needed smaller vessels, awl the ship owners and fisherman could make more money.

The vessels used in the fishing were nearly all built right here in Cohasset giving employment to many shipwrights. Bigelow lists 38 vessels from 42 to 151 tons built at Cohasset from 1789 to 1806. Most of the timber for ship construction was locally felled and sawed. He lists another 27 vessels from 21 to 96 tons built in Cohasset between 1811 and 1819. Amongst the Doane papers surviving, there is an 1819 listing of 39 ships engaged in fishing in that year, (The harbor must have been really crowded when they were all in port).

Bigelow further states that of 75 vessels which were built here from 1789 to 1813, 36 had been lost, were sold, or engaged in other business than fishing.

In Roger A. Leonard's fascinating book, "We Protect, an Historical Account and Social Study of the Portuguese in Cohasset, Massachusetts"(1994), in his chapter on "Mackereling" at page 108, he gives a list of 60 sailing vessels of 20 tons or more belonging to Cohasset in 1850.

What kind of fish is usually atop the weathervane at the library?

When you figure that most fishing schooners went to sea with crew of 8 to 14 seamen, you can see what a large percentage of the population was in the fishing industry. The net profit of a voyage was usually divided one-third or sometimes up to one-half to the ship owner and the remainder equally split among the crew.

In addition to the ship building, the barrels and hogsheads used to contain the salted fish were made from local lumber in coopers' shops of which there were several around the Cove. The salt industry also grew up in support of the fisheries. There were several acres of saltworks at Windmill Point (the windmill was used to pump the salt water into the brine vats), near Sandy Cove and on Beach Island. (See map in Bigelow at page 414).

The mackerel fishing grounds ran from the northern coast of New Jersey in the early spring to the Canadian Maritimes in the late fall and were mostly only 30 to 50 miles off the coast. The fish were processed after the day's fishing - beheaded, gutted, and filleted. They were also graded for inspection, No. 1, Superior quality (worth a good deal more), No. 2, and No.3 (worth quite a bit less). The price varied a good deal from year to year. Also the fatter mackerel taken in August or September (bloaters) usually sold for more.

The all important size of the catch per fishing trip depended a lot on the weather and also a good deal on the knowledge and experience of the skipper. The grading was confirmed by U.S. Customs inspectors stationed herein Cohasset. Our town was one of the 11 Ports of Delivery in Massachusetts until they were all closed down and everything moved to Boston in 1913. Leonard has a list of 14 employees at our Customs House in 1860. (page 118). Nine are described as "graders" and four are "inspectors of fish."

In 1845 Cohasset was the fourth fishing port in Massachusetts, per Bigelow, trailing Gloucester, Boston, and Wellfleet only. Bigelow also says that in 1851 there were 44 vessels and 561 men and boys employed in the mackerel business. A map in Bigelow (page 427) shows the locations of 15 wharves around the Cove "used at the time of the close of our fishing days. In those days and until the turn of the 20th century, there was very little commercial lobster fishing from Cohasset, but the use of the harbor was almost solely commercial with virtually no pleasure boats until the very late 19th century.

Many of the capable Portuguese from the Azores became the skippers of fishing schooners and the crews of many of the vessels were comprised of their fellow Azoreans during the last 20 years of the mackerel fishing. Leonard says that of the 100 families of Azorean lineage who came to Cohasset, 11 men became Master Mariners receiving "Captain's Papers." He gives fascinating anecdotal accounts of these sailors (pages 123-150 of his book), and I heartily recommend it. Cohasset can very proud of its numerous citizens of Azorean descent.

And that's a short sketch of why the fish on the weathervane is a mackerel.

Candidates and Chianti night

The Cohasset Republican Town Committee will host a "Candidates and Chianti" evening on Friday, June 7, from 6 to 9 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church, Highland Avenue, Cohasset Common.

The event is free to the public, although a lasagna dinner will be offered for $20 per person donation at the door, $15 if RSVP by June 5. The dinner will include a glass of Chianti with lasagna, salad, dessert and coffee.

All are welcome to listen to and ask questions of the Republican candidates including Kerry Healey and Jim Rappaport, candidates for Lieutenant Governor, Cohasset's very own Bruce Herzfelder and Nathaniel Palmer, candidates for State Treasurer and State Representative respectively, Dan Grabauskas, candidate for State Treasurer, Senator Robert Hedlund, Lou Gonzaga for U.S. Congress, and Richard Schmidt, Norfolk County Register of Probate.

RSVP for dinner is recommended and can be made by calling Edythe Ford at 781-383-1648 or Heather Palmer at 781-383-3339.

Selectmen meeting preview

Ralph Dormitzer, a resident of S. Main Street, will present his results of a noise study he is conducting for air traffic. At annual Town Meeting, Dormitzer was part of the group that championed the cause of appropriating $30,000 to join a lawsuit with Hull, Hingham and Revere to stop a proposed runway at Logan. He has been conducting noise surveys at various places in town to show the detrimental effects of air traffic on Cohasset.

Also on the selectmen's agenda for Tuesday will be a continued discussion of which firm to hire for the Village Improvements Design and Construction Plans. The four firms came in on Tuesday for interviews but the board did not reach a decision.

Tougher times ahead for students

School board OKs honor roll changes

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

For some students, being on the honor roll has come too easy. While Cohasset has an intelligent group of students in its schools, some feel too many are making the top list.

So now getting on the honor roll at Cohasset High School will be more difficult than it has ever been.

Principal Michael Jones said the faculty was concerned that making the honor roll wasn't challenging enough. In recent years almost 25 percent of the high school was making high honors. Forming a committee of mostly faculty, Jones and company examined the recent trend.

"We felt it's something that merited an examination," he said. "We felt the standards were too attainable."

Jones said he felt the increased number of students on the honor roll reflected both an increased effort on the students' part along with a tendency toward grade inflation.

To that end, the committee proposed changes in the criteria for students being placed on the list which were accepted by the school committee earlier this month.

"We felt the standards were too attainable."
— Principal Michael Jones

The criteria for high honors has shifted from requiring students to have a Grade Point Average of 3.67 and receiving all "A's" and only one "B," to having no GPA requirement and mandating that students must now have no grade lower than an "A minus."

For honors, the requirements were formerly a GPA requirement of 3.20 and a combination of all "A's" and "B's". Now, the school has waived the GPA standard and said to make honors a student can not receive a grade lower than a "B."

For honorable mention, a recognition not previously available, a student can receive no grade lower than a "B minus."

For all of the honors, a student must be enrolled in at least three major courses, and physical education and art classes are weighted more heavily then they were previously. Jones said this was an important part of the changes that will help to emphasize a student being proficient in all aspects of school.

"It's more of a level playing field now," he said. "We think this encourages more of a well rounded education."

Supt. Ted Malvey said he supports the change. He said it's important for a school system to constantly look at its requirements for the honor roll.

"It became an honest issue to take a look at," he said. "The school committee felt it needed to be tightened up."

Malvey said in his opinion the high number of students on the honor roll wasn't a concern.

"We hope our students are internally motivated," he said. "However, it's always nice to have some public recognition for those who go above and beyond in their studies."

Rick Flynn, chairman of the school committee which signed off on the changes, said the presentation made to the board made it seem getting on the honor roll was too easily attainable.

"We know the students in this district work as hard as any," Flynn said. "By tightening the standards for making the honor roll will be viewed as an extra achievement."

Flynn added making the honor roll does not go on a student's transcripts. The only thing the student receives, besides an enormous amount of pride, is a certificate and their name in the Mariner, he said.

Band concerts on the Common

During the past 11 seasons, concert funding has been provided through the generosity of the South Shore Playhouse Associates, Inc. The South Shore Music Circus donations are matched by a grant from the American Federation of Musicians, in New York City.

Based upon continued South Shore Music Circus funding, the schedule for the 2002 season is Tuesday, July 9, and Tuesday, July 23, at 7:30 p.m. on the Cohasset Common.

Performances will be by the 30-piece South Shore Concert Band under the direction of Richard P. Whitmarsh.

Concerts are free of charge and the public is invited. It is a good idea to bring either lawn chairs or blankets to sit on, and from time to time, insect repellent is a good item to have available. You may call the recreation office at 383-4109 to check on the status of concerts should you be in doubt as to weather conditions.

Fresh Air host families sought

The Fresh Air Fund is seeking more host families in the area, to open their homes to a New York City child for two weeks this summer. Since 1877, The Fresh Air Fund has enabled 1.7 million disadvantaged young New Yorkers to experience summer in suburban and small town communities.

Fresh Air host families can choose the gender and age of their visitor. First-time Fresh Air children are between the ages of six and 12.

Lady laxers must win today to clinch tourney berth

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset High lady laxers came up short this past Tuesday in their bid to clinch a berth in the tournament, placing them in a must win situation for today's regular season finale at home versus Bourne (4 p.m. start).

today, 4 p.m.

"It's do or die," said rookie lacrosse coach Torin Sweeney, following Tuesday's 12-6 loss to visiting Martha's Vineyard. "If they want to make the tournament, they have got to win.""

The Cohasset girls knew going in to Tuesday's match-up versus consistently powerful Martha's Vineyard that they would probably be up against it today. The Vineyarders have already qualified for the state tourney, and this game served as a means for them to get a higher seed.

The underdog Lady Skippers jumped out to a 1-0 lead on senior Maggie O'Neill's second goal of the season. Cohasset did hold the visitors scoreless for the first five minutes of the game, with junior Gia Petrakis making a few very impressive saves.

However, the Vineyard attack proved too much, as it eventually responded with four unanswered goals in a span of less than five minutes to take a 4-1 lead. Led by senior captain Emma Lovewell, Martha's Vineyard made it 10-3 by halftime. Lovewell scored four of her game high six goals in the first half.

Using a balanced attack, the Skippers attempted to crawl back into it.

Tracksters lap field at Class D meet

Maitland, Baird, Krupczak and 4x1 team advance to all-states

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Local tracksters were busy on Saturday competing for the chance to advance to this weekend's All-State championships at Worcester State. The top-four finishers and the next two fastest individuals in each event at the MIAA Class championships earned themselves a trip to the All-States.

At the Class D meet in Norwell, the 27 points posted by the Cohasset boys earned them seventh place, the best of any team in the area.

Cohasset's Jared Krupczak finished a solid fourth in the 100 in 11.64 and teammate Tim Baird was second in the 800 with a time of 2:00.54.

Ian Kidder put together a leap of 39-10 in the triple jump for a Cohasset sixth place. The Skippers' Peter Maitland garnered second in the javelin with a superb throw of 184-5. This will make the second straight trip to all-states for Maitland in the javelin. Last year, the senior captain finished fourth at all-states to become the first C.H.S. athlete in a decade to advance to the New England Track and Field championships.

The Skippers battled Weston and Stoneham to the wire in the 4x100 relay (Krupczak, Kidder, Jason Brown and Eric Belz). Both Cohasset and Stoneham were clocked in 45.46 with Stoneham getting the nod for second. Weston was a step ahead in 45.45.

Norwell sophomore Tom Kleber was fourth with a 2:00.80. On the girls side, Norwell's Kayla Halloran followed up her fifth-place finish in the Coaches Invitational with a third in the mile at 5:17.23. Teammate Lydia Shute cleared 5 feet in the high jump for fourth and the Tourney bound!

Girls tennis primed to build on last year's run, boys aim to surprise

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Boys tennis tourney action
Cohasset at Medfield today, 3:30 p.m.

If there is any time for a team to be at its best, it is right before the playoffs. That time is now for the Cohasset High boys and girls tennis teams, as both posted their most impressive wins of the spring in their respective regular season finales last week.

The girls wrapped up their regular season with a 4-1 over Hingham in a match-up of two of the top teams for the upcoming South Sectional. The win marked the 13th in a row for the Lady Skippers after season opening losses to league rival Norwell and this same Hingham squad.

The boys closed out their second consecutive tournament campaign with a 5-0 blowout over Carver, after narrowly edging the Crusaders on April 25. Of the Skippers eight wins this year (8-4 in league, 8-6 overall), this was the only one that was not a 3-2 decision.

Word was received just before going to print the boys had been seeded 18th and would be playing a preliminary round game at Medfield (15th seed) today at 3:30. The winner of that match will get SSL champion Norwell (16-1, 12-0 in SSL play) tomorrow at Norwell (also 3:30).

The girls were seeded sixth and slated to host 11th seeded Ursuline.

Previte nets seven in 21-4 first round tourney blowout of Lynn English

Showing the kind of offense that took them to the state championship game a year ago, the Cohasset boys' varsity lacrosse team knocked off Lynn English 21-4 in a preliminary round match-up Tuesday night at Alumni Field.

The Skippers set a school tournament scoring record with the victory, topping their 2001 tourney high of 18 goals versus Ashland. 10 different Cohasset players found the back of the net in the win, led by senior Paul Previte's seven goals and an assist.

"This was exactly the effort we needed," said coach Kevin Orcutt. "Lynn English hadn't played as tough a schedule as ours, but had faced excellent teams in Beverly, Ipswich and North Andover. We knew we had to play well, and we did."

Cohasset scored the first four goals of the game, all in the first six minutes, as Curt Kahn (twice), Previte and Eric Libby all managed to beat their defenders and goalie Nick Connick. But the Bulldogs hung tough, and Cohasset led only 6-2 at the end of the first.

"We had to adjust what we were doing on faceoffs, and extend our defense," said Orcutt. "We did that, kept the ball moving on offense, and got a terrific game from Nick Spirito and Tom Anderson on defense."

Cohasset was up 13-3 at the half, and cleared its bench in the third and fourth quarters. Kahn (five assists) was one of five Skippers with a pair of goals. The others were midfielders Matt Davis (one assist) and Robert Hickey, and Jason Moore (one assist) and Mike Rasmussen. Single goal scorers were Pete Whoriskey, Sean Chase, David DeVito and Dwayne Morris, who collected the first of his varsity career. Senior Eric Libby picked up a single-game career high seven assists.

All three Cohasset goalies saw action. Senior Kyle Weber let in a pair of goals while registering four saves. Soph Nick Murphy gave up a goal while picking up two saves. Freshman Chris Simms had a pair of fourth-quarter saves.

The Skippers will advance to the round of 16 to face fifth-seeded Norwell, a Pilgrim rival they beat 9-5 on the road earlier in the season. They'll travel again to the Clippers on Saturday, probably for a 7 p.m. face-off.

team and a worthy opponent," said Orcutt. "This was a great tune-up, and I think we'll be facing them at our best."

In the final game of the regular season, the Skippers knocked off Pilgrim rival Barnstable to finish 13-7, and 7-6 in the Pilgrim Conference. In that game, nine Cohasset players scored, led by Eric Libby's hat trick. Paul Previte, Matt Davis, Jason Moore and Robert Hickey each had a pair of goals.

Youth laxers sweep light holiday-week

With the Memorial Day holiday, Cohasset Youth Lacrosse took the weekend off. But three of its teams did play in the week leading up to the holiday, and all came away victorious.

On the boys side, it was the 14-U (7th and 8th grade) boys team staying unbeaten with a 10-1 Wednesday wipeout of Quincy. The boys — many of whom were coming directly from a middle-school game to the Quincy contest, dominated from start to finish in what proved to be an easy victory.

Meanwhile, Cohasset's junior girls teams took to the road on Monday, May 20, finally getting to play games in Norwell that had been rained out twice previously. The games were worth the wait, as Cohasset swept its more-experienced rivals on the afternoon.

The 12-U team (5th and 6th grades), controlled play early on, and took a 2-0 lead on the strength of goals from Amy Meikleham and Kaley Madge. But four other Cohasset scores were nullified by penalties, and Norwell rallied to tie the game at 2 before halftime.

Cohasset regrouped in the second half, making its shots count as it grabbed a lead it would never relinquish. Gabriella Flibotte scored twice, with Paige Strecker converting a direct-free position and Maura Barnes stretching Cohasset's lead to 4. Norwell then mounted a rally — helped by yet another Cohasset score nullified by penalty — and closed the gap to 6-4. From there, however, Cohasset proved more aggressive, controlling the ball. Meikleham finished the day's scoring with her second goal of the day, as Cohasset won by a 7-4 margin, improving its record to 3-2-1.

Cohasset's 14-U team (7th & 8th grades) took the field next, and also controlled the action against Norwell. Both teams, however, were stymied by outstanding goaltending for nearly 20 minutes before Haley Haracz finished a fast break with a long rush to the net and a bounce shot that found the mark.

Norwell came out hot in the second half, and would have tied the score early except for five point-blank saves from Aisling Guinee. Guinee, who finished the game with 11 stops, stuffed two shots from the goalmouth, and then three more in quick succession, before triggering the fast break that helped lead to Charlotte Landon's first goal of the season. Kathryn Evans extended the lead to 3-0 and with Cohasset controlling play it looked like the team would coast to victory. Norwell had other plans, however, scoring with four minutes left in the game, and then with two minutes left to draw to within a goal. From there, the action was fast, furious and end-to-end, but Cohasset's defense was able to break up Norwell's offensive thrusts until time ran out.

With the win, the 14-U girls improved their record to 2-4.

back win over Mansfield last week, Cohasset got tallies from junior Maura McKenney, sophomore Nicole Turgiss and senior captain Krisitin Sheerin to make the score 10-6.

"I feel like we are in those games," noted Sweeney, who has seen his team beat Mansfield after trailing 7-1, and Bourne after being down 6-1. "We've been down six and won before."

Sweeney elected not to call a time-out with his team down four goals, opting instead to try to tire out the visiting squad, who had only one available sub on the bench. Yet, Vineyard restarted their vicious frontline attack, with Lovewell recording two more goals in the last five minutes to put the game out of reach.

"They were a little more disciplined than us, and their passing was just excellent," observed Sweeney, who also made note of the fact that both the Cohasset and Vineyard teams were missing two of their top players. "They ran some nice plays. They had a very opportunistic offense."

Cohasset did spread the scoring around, with Sheerin the only multiple scorer. O'Neill, McKenney, Turgiss and Genovese all had tallies to round out the offense.

Still, Sweeney felt his team could not get on track, as Vineyard's swarming defense cut off his normally solid transition game.

"They marked really well," he said. "They were doubling (double-teaming) the ball, and we weren't able to adjust to the press."

Cohasset will be playing Bourne on Thursday, a team the Lady Skippers narrowly defeated 11-8 three weeks ago on the road. Sweeney said the main focus will be cutting down on defensive mistakes. The Canalwomen offense had a very effective midfield pick they would set for their scorers, a move more commonly seen on the basketball court, which led to four Bourne goals last time around.

With their record standing at 8-9 after the loss to Martha's Vineyard, Bourne is the Lady Skippers final shot to get to .500 and repeat as a playoff team.

Clippers' 4x400 relay team was sixth in 4:21.95.IAA Class championships earned themselves a trip to the All-States.

The Cohasset duo of Gillian Weber (2:26.04) and Mary Silvia (2:26.61) went 5-6 in the girls' 800.

Notre Dame's Kourtney Trainor had a big day by winning the Class B title in Reading, pulling away from the field and crossing the finish line in 44.5 seconds. The Aces took fifth and sixth in the shot put as well with Trainor and Grace Cunningham heaving the shot 34 feet, 6 inches and 33-6-1/2, respectively. Cunningham also finished fourth in the discus with a 105-6 toss.

Trainor was pleased with her 1.2-second win over Dennis-Yarmouth's Marlene Priest (45.7) but disappointed she wasn't able to match the 38-11 effort she turned in at the Coaches Invitational, which garnered second place.

"I felt really good but I was nervous," said Trainor, the Coaches Invitational 300 hurdle champion. "I used that (Coaches Invitational win) as a motivator. I thought, 'I won that race so I should win here'."

Suzanne Timmons raced to a fifth-place 13.3 finish in the 100 dash while teammate Nicole Shirley was third in the 200 (26.7) a half-second behind Marshfield's Ashley Hubbard. The Rams' sophomore was second with a time of 26.2. Notre Dame also picked up fifth in the 4x800 relay in 9:59 and recorded a 4:17.4 in the 4x400 relay to clinch sixth.

In the Class A championships held at St. John's Prep in Danvers, defending 400-meter dash champion DaviAnn Brown, who has been hampered by a groin injury, finished third in 57.83. Freshman Hannah Rapalee continued to run well, taking second behind Framingham's Jen Perry with a stellar 2:19.65. The Lakers also took fourth in the 4x100 relay in 51.08.

Hingham's Chris Orr was the Harbormen's top performer at the Class C meet at chilly Plymouth South. Orr was a strong second in the 300 hurdles, finishing just two-tenths behind Stoughton's Kevin Bright in 39.2. Orr also placed fourth in the long jump with a leap of 18-2-1/2. Teammate Kyle Morse's 134-9 heave in the discus earned him fifth place. Rockland's P.J. Welch was sixth with a 129-6 toss. Steve Mills also cracked into the top six for the Harbormen, taking sixth in the shot put with his 47-8-1/4 effort.

Melissa Murphy of Rockland didn't lose any steam after a fine showing at the Coaches Invitational. Murphy battled Pentucket's Ashley Moulton to the finish of the 100-meter dash to take second in 12.6 to Moulton's 12.5. Nicole Christoforo of Rockland was third in the 800 in 2:22.10 and Hingham's Allison Donovan continued her comeback from a leg injury to run 5:29.9 in the mile for third. Scituate's Kiely Cuddihy and Sade Judge finished 2-4 in the shot put with throws of 36-2-3/4 and 34-8-3/4, respectively.

Unfortunately, no time or date for this match had been announced at the time this went to print.

"The teams are peaking at the right time," assessed 11th year girls coach Sarah Meehan. "We are ready for this tournament."

Starting the season 0-2, the Cohasset girls team seemed to be lost in the mix of the top teams on the South Shore. This might explain the appearance of greater attention being paid to the likes of Canton, Bourne, Norwell and Hingham by some of the area's bigger newspapers .

Meehan, however, views this as a positive for her team.

"We've almost flown in under the radar," noted the veteran coach, who took her team to the Sectional semi-finals last year for the first time in the program's history. "We just haven't got the same press. We don't think anyone is expecting us to hit them hard, but the teams that have played us know how deadly we are."

Deadly is a good word to describe this team, as six of the team's seven starters in the playoff line-up were selected to the South Shore League All-Star team. Within the past two weeks, Cohasset knocked off Hingham 4-1, and shocked Norwell, 5-0, for a share of the South Shore League crown.

In last year's playoffs, the Lady Skippers trounced Canton (currently 15-0) in the first round.

The match against Hingham was highlighted by another superb performance at second singles by freshman Elizabeth Stone, who eliminated Jen Wassen 6-0, 6-0. Sophomore Holly Graham played her normal consistent game at third singles for a straight set win as well.

Of course the doubles teams were as strong as ever, with Julie Shea and Kate Englander winning 6-3, 7-6 at first doubles. Kelly Stone and Courtney Caron recovered from a shaky start at second doubles to win the third set, 6-1, and give their team the victory.

For the boys, they completed the rain make-up match with Carver in just over an hour and a half, giving them their first shut out of the year.

At first singles, junior captain David Ingber, named to the All-Star team for the second year in a row, took down All-Star counterpart DJ Lenahan of Carver 6-2, 6-3.

Tim Anton needed only 25 minutes to dispose of his opponent, 6-0, 6-1, at second singles, and Jessie Brewer's straight set victory went much the same way.

Junior Ross Lieb-Lappen and sophomore Andrew Wise combined to give their team its second consecutive league win at first doubles, and Scott Faber and Andrew Busk easily took the second doubles decision as well.

The seedings for the South Sectional tennis tournaments came out Wednesday morning, with the two rounds being played Thursday and over the weekend.

Getting a jump start

Coach Knurek preaches need to hit ground running next season

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

If this past baseball season had started on May 1 rather than April 1, Cohasset baseball coach Bob Knurek feels things might have been dramatically different for his team.

"By the end of the year, we were doing a lot of things fundamentally that I was looking for from day one, so that was somewhat encouraging," said the fifth year head coach. "By the time we got things going, though, it was really too late to think much about post-season goals or anything like that."

The team did pull off a couple of wins in the second half of the season over state tourney bound teams that helped make the 4-16 finish a little more palatable, knocking off Abington (13-7) on May 9 and Provincetown (11-8) in extra innings last Thursday, 9-8.

Of course, the slow start was not completely unexpected. Knurek's Skippers were already decimated by graduation (all-stars TJ Bilodeau and Doug O'Brien, for starters) and injury (season long loss of pitching ace Nick Bolster to a detached retina) when they opened camp, and it only got worse, as March showers rendered the drainage-poor Milliken Field virtually unusable for most of the pre-season.

This obviously set back all of Cohasset's players, but most notably the younger players Knurek was counting on – specifically freshman Ted Straughn and Louis Blanco, as well as sophomore Mike Dooley and even junior Mike Snowdale.

Each of these players, not all that surprisingly, finished the season on a roll, living up to their coach's expectations over the second half, and in a few cases even exceeding them.

Dooley, who was thrust in to the lead-off spot early on, settled in to the role quickly and wound up batting over .300, while emerging as a top rate table setter for the offense.

After a horrendous start to the season, Snowdale got his average over .290 with a strong closing push.

These two will likely be asked to move up a spot in the rotation next spring and go 1-2 for the Skippers. Snowdale earned half of the Skippers two wins on the mound this season, while Dooley continued to improve throughout the season as a reliever and occasional starter. Both also played middle infield when not pitching.

"We'll be looking to both of those guys to pick right up where they left off this year," said Knurek. "But, really, that's the theme for the whole team next year. That's what I told them all at the end of the season. To come back on day one in shape, and in good baseball shape, and ready to go."

The evolution of Straughn and Blanco followed the course Knurek predicted.

"They were freshman and it took a while for them to adjust to everything being a step or two faster than they were used to, especially the pitching, but by the end of the year they were playing like seasoned sophomores," said Knurek, who estimates both youngsters hit over .300 over the second half of the season. "That's one benefit anyway of giving freshman a lot of playing time. You put them that much further ahead for the next few years."

Among the other players Knurek figures he'll be looking to for greater contributions next year are sophomores John Andrade (pitcher/infield) and John Downing (outfield), as well as juniors Trey Curry and Mark Chapman.

As for losses, the Skippers will three sets of shoes to fill next spring, with the biggest pair by far belonging to SSL all-star Tim Straughn. All Tim did in his senior was run away with virtually every team race offensively, including batting average (.438), home runs (five) and RBIs. He was also far and away the team's best pitcher with two wins and a 2.50 ERA.

"You don't replace a player like Tim Straughn with just one player," assessed Knurek of his team's best pitcher, catcher, infielder and hitter. "It will take several players stepping it up a lot to fill that void. He did it all for us. He was so versatile and talented in so many ways.

"Then, on top of that, he was just a great leader. He never let the kids get down when things weren't going well. The kids all looked up to him. He'll really be missed."

The other two players the team will lose to the caps and gowns are outfielder Matt Ogrodnick and utility infielder Dave Krueger.

Those who knew him well commented on his integrity, consideration toward others and gentle sense of humor. In a 1989 Cohasset Mariner article entitled, "The best teacher in CHS history gets set to retire" a former student remarked, "He was a very soft-spoken gentleman, who never raised his voice nor had the need to. He. just seemed the absolute model of integrity. You couldn't imagine cheating or being dishonest in a class of Bob Thompson's."

WORSHIP NOTES

Inclusion workshop

On Monday, June 3 from 7-9 p.m., St. Mary of the Sacred Heart Parish on Route 139 in Hanover will host an "Evening of Listening and Dialogue" working toward the inclusion of persons with disabilities in the life of the Church.

The question, "How can the Church serve you better?" will be addressed at this session. The Church is richer and truly the Body of Christ when all are welcome. The South Region of the Archdiocese of Boston will explore more and better ways to include persons with all levels of disabilities in the parish life.

This evening of listening and dialogue is planned to gain input from persons living with all levels of disabilities, their family members, clergy, catechetical leaders, educators, health-care workers, and anyone with an interest in this ministry, especially young people. The questions to be addressed are:

- What are the needs of persons with disabilities?
- What are the needs of their families?
- How can we, as Church, promote programs that enhance spiritual growth and development?
- What gifts are we missing by not including persons with disabilities in the life of the Church?

For more information on this upcoming workshop concerning persons with disabilities, call Marilyn Zedick at 781-829-1229.

Pray the rosary

Children and families are invited to pray the rosary for respect for life on Friday, June 7, at 3:15 p.m. at St. Anthony Church, 10 Summer St. This devotion is sponsored each First Friday from 3:15 to 3:45. p.m. First Friday services also include: Adoration of the Blessed Sacrament front noon to 4:45 p.m., Benediction at 4:45 p.m. and Mass at 5 p.m. In addition, the Respect Life Committee sponsors a rosary for life every Friday morning following the 7 a.m. Mass.

French student exchange trip next fall

Cohasset can expect and influx of French culture in the fall. In October, students from the Lyce´e Jeanne d'Arc in Rouen, France will stay in Cohasset for about two weeks. Cohasset will return the favor in April when students will go to Rouen, France and stay with their French counterparts. The Cohasset students will spend about seven days in Rouen and four days in Paris.

During the time spent in Rouen, the Cohasset students will participate in daily excursions while their host families' kids are in school. Weekends are usually spent with the host family and one day a week is spent at the French High School.

Remembering Clark Chatterton

The members of the Clark Chatterton Memorial Fund Committee would like to thank all the residents of Cohasset who have contributed to the memorial fund established in Clark's memory.

One project the Committee has undertaken (with the assistance of the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club) will be the installation of a new basketball court in the playground behind the renovated Deer Hill School - it is anticipated that it will be completed prior to this fall.

The fund also contributed to the new discus cage on Alumni Field and there will be a Life Fitness Cross Trainer exercise machine donated in his name to the new fitness center at the Cohasset Middle High School. We are hopeful that this new piece of equipment will be available for use when school opens in September.

Finally, the Committee invites all runners and walkers, young and old, to participate in the first annual "Clark's Fund Run" which is scheduled for: Saturday, June 15, at 10 a.m. The "Run/Walk" is a 3.5 mile race that begins and ends at the South Shore Music Circus. The registration fee (postmarked by June 1) is $12 and applications may be picked up at Good Sport or at the Cohasset Middle High School. Any questions should be directed to: Debbie Beal, Physical Education Teacher, Cohasset Middle High School. Late registrations (postmarked after June 1) are $15.

IT'S HAPPENING

Red Cross blood drive is June 12

The Red Cross has scheduled the next Cohasset Community Blood Drive for Wednesday, June 12. The Blood Drive will be at St. Anthony Parish Center at the corner of South Main St. and Summer St. from 1:30-7:30 p.m. As in the past, baby-sitting will be provided from 3-5 p.m. Ample parking is available.

The American Red Cross is asking all eligible blood donors in the Cohasset area to give blood when the bloodmobile comes to Cohasset. According to Cathy Pray, Director, "Only five out of every 100 people give blood, and the number of new donors decreased dramatically last year. First time donors are urgently needed to replace donors who have moved away or become ineligible to donate."

The best way to give blood for the first time is to come with a friend who is experienced in the donation process. New donors usually find the procedure easy and painless and most come back regularly to donate. "The biggest obstacle seems to be overcoming that initial fear," said Pray. "That's why we're counting on our regular donors to help by bringing a friend to this blood drive."

Most people can give blood through the American Red Cross. Potential donors must be at least 17 years of age, in good health and weigh over 110 pounds. In most cases, donors may give if they are on medication, but should know the names of these medications.

The Red Cross always counts on a good turnout when it visits Cohasset so please respond, if possible, when a volunteer from one of the church, civic, corporate or social organizations calls. New donors are welcome and especially needed. To register and make an appointment for donating at a specific time or if you have any questions, please call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 383-1290. You can also call the Red Cross at 1-800-448-3543.

'Are you OK?'

Please come to a brief, informational gathering regarding the Cohasset Triad Program and the "Are You OK?" Telephone Reassurance System on Tuesday, June 4 at 9:30 a.m. at 60 Elm St. (Harborview Apartments).

This gathering will help to learn more about the new senior citizens' free Telephone Reassurance Program. Refreshments will be served.

For more information, call Cheryl Bambery at the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office at 1-866-900-7865.

Sign-ups for summer programs

Registration for the following sports clinics are being accepted at the Cohasset Recreation Department Office on the first floor of the Town Hall.

There is a baseball camp the week of June 24, Monday through Friday, ages 5-12.

For more information, call 781-383-4109 and ask for the Recreation Department.

Buttonwood hosts coffee with authors

Buttonwood Books & Toys presents its spring Coffee with the Authors on Tuesday, June 4 from 9:45-11:30 a.m. at Atlantica Restaurant in Cohasset. Featured authors are Alice Hoffman for "Blue Diary", Stewart O'Nan for "Wish You Were Here" and Dominique Browning for "Around The House And In The Garden". Alice Hoffman weaves a tale in "Blue Diary" involving luck and destiny. Set against the backdrop of a small Massachusetts town, one man's dark secret is revealed, and life is forever changed for all its inhabitants. Stewart O'Nan presents a vivid portrait in "Wish You Were Here" of the interaction among three generations of an American family as they gather for one last visit to their beloved vacation home. Dominique Browning's observations in "Around The House And In The Garden" of the ups and downs of domestic life reveal her warmth, wit and spirit. Advance tickets are required. Call Buttonwood at (781) 383-2665 for more information or to reserve at $13 per person.

Norwell tour benefits South Shore Theraputic Riding Program

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

This is New England, and there are almost as many lovers of old barns as there are lovers of old homes.

For the children in the South Shore Therapeutic Riding Program based at Pembroke's Riverwind Farm, the barn is a big part of their day. It is where they greet their horses, their horse walkers, and begin the therapy that does so much for them.

It is appropriate, therefore that the June 1 benefit for the South Shore Therapeutic Riding Program is a tour of ten of Norwell's beautiful, elegant, practical and historically significant barns.

Delores Bailey, who came up with the idea of the fundraiser, said she got some varied reactions from the owners of the barns when she proposed the idea to them

"A lot of them asked why anyone would want to see their barn. But the barns we have on the tour are so lovely, so breathtaking, I think a lot of people would want to see inside them. You'd be surprised at how many people really love barns," said Bailey — a barn lover herself.

While some of the barns are large, some small, some on major routes driven everyday and some tucked away, all the barns have something in common, according to Bailey — real-life use.

"Not all of them even have animals in them," said Bailey, who noted some of the barns house cars, apartments, even a stage and a rock-climbing wall.

But of course, many do have animals, including some of the most beloved horses in town. One barn on the tour, built only 15 years, ago, houses a breeding and lay-up facility for race horses. This working barn has four box stalls, a tack room and a shower stall for the horses.

"The barns we have on the tour are so lovely, so breathtaking, I think a lot of people would want to see inside them. You'd be surprised at how many people really love barns."
Barn tour organizer Delores Bailey

Modeled after two other historically significant barns on the tour, a River Street barn built with 1800s style post-and-beam construction is home to a 42-year-old pony, a pet donkey and bunny, and the tour's only celebrity pet, a miniature donkey named Sophia owned by Aerosmith's Brad Whitford. The barn, complete with a globe window, rises to a third floor loft which has views of the North River in the winter months.

Another barn on the tour houses the beloved horse belonging to a girl who benefited from the South Shore Therapeutic Riding Program and went on to become an accomplished rider. The barn, which was designed by the girl's mother and built by her father in 1994, houses Dominic, a 17-year-old Dutch warm blood, an accomplished third level dressage horse. He lives with Kew, an English thoroughbred cross country event horse.

Some of the barns on the tour, like this one that houses a pony and a horse, date back to the 1800s and feature post and bean construction.

A Summer Street barn has no horses, but does boast the "cleanest, most densely populated chicken coop in town," according to Bailey. The barn, built with post-and-beam construction in the mid-1800s by the Ellms family, was almost demolished by Hurricane Gloria, but restored in 1986. The barn now houses a restored '52 Pontiac "woody" station wagon and four sheep, along with the chickens.

On the old Donovan property sits a barn that has an apartment with a view of a backyard pond. The building is finished in Douglas fir, with an old-fashioned vertical grain, and has a foundation made of boulders. The barn also houses miniature sheep and chickens.

One of Norwell's most historic barns, built circa 1840, is also on the tour. The barn was built on the property of shipwright Job Randall, the original owner of the Chittenden Shipyard. The back of the barn is a professional dog-grooming area, where those on the tour may get of a glimpse of some champion Golden Retrievers who live there.

Four barns are within walking distance of Norwell Center. One of them — Florence Cushing's summer home —has three stalls and houses some ponies and horses that have taught many local children to ride.

Across the street is the famous red barn, which underwent extensive restoration in the 1990s and is on the National Register of Historic Places. The architectural features in this 1861 barn include a balloon frame, post-and-beam construction and beveled-edge beams.

Nearby, on the property of an historic Federal-style home, is a barn with an upstairs stage, where family members put on many productions.

Another barn, built in 1845, boasts a globe

Experience Jeff Corwin – LIVE!

Jeff Corwin leads a life one can only dream of. Raised in Norwell, he now travels the globe several months each year in search of exotic and endangered animals for his Animal Planet show, The Jeff Corwin Experience. One day he's chasing tigers in Thailand, and the next he's ducking orangutans in Borneo. When you see the finished product on television, it's as if you're right there with him, as he exclaims, "Look at this! Look at this beautiful creature, this gorgeous green eyelash viper!" His excitement is contagious.

Raised in Norwell, he now travels the globe several months each year in search of exotic and endangered animals for his Animal Planet show, The Jeff Corwin Experience.

On June 13 at 7 p.m., Jeff will return to his alma mater, Norwell High School, for a special one-time performance to benefit the EcoZone at the South Shore Natural Science Center. "An Evening with Jeff Corwin and His Curious Animals" will feature a live animal presentation, followed by a Meet 'n Greet session with Jeff.

A Jeff Corwin magnet

Conceived by Jeff Corwin, the EcoZone is a multidimensional, interactive live animal habitat exhibit area focusing on the ecosystems of southeastern Massachusetts. It is a recreation of natural habitats complete with water, vegetation and living animals. The EcoZone underscores the rich biodiversity of our region, the North River Watershed, and inspires children and families to experience the wonder of nature in their own back yards. The first exhibits opened in January 2002 to outstanding reviews. Fundraising to complete the vision of the EcoZone is currently underway.

The South Shore Natural Science Center is a non-profit environmental education center serving the entire south shore for the past 40 years. Seating is limited for this special evening. Tickets for the show are $50 and $35, and can be purchased by calling the Science Center at (781) 659-2559.

A thriller to stay awake for

Insomnia (B+)

Al Pacino tries to find his way through the almost surreal Alaskan landscape.

For reasons never fully given, a seasoned Los Angeles detective, Will Dormer (Al Pacino), and his partner and friend, Hap Eckhart (Martin Donovan), are sent to Alaska to contend with the murder of a young woman. One of the local cops (Nicky Katt) is resentful, mildly passive aggressive; another, Ellie Burr (Hilary Swank), is in awe of Dormer and yearns to help in every way she can. Dormer's expertise leads him quickly to the dead girl's boyfriend (Jonathan Jackson), handsome, sneering, uncooperative, then to the victim's supposed best friend, then to others, but ultimately to a writer, Walter Finch (Robin Williams), with whom the dead girl seems to have struck up some kind of friendship, maybe sexual, certainly involving mentoring.

Finch is almost certainly the killer, but Dormer has accidentally shot his partner — or was it accidental? Hap was about to sing to the Internal Affairs Division, which Dormer knows will bring him down too. Whatever is going on back home in L.A. somehow has to do with jealousies and improper procedures and who knows what else, and the nearly 24 hours of daylight in the Alaskan summer impacts so badly on Dormer he can't sleep, and in his insomnia he grows careless, slightly off-stride, with Hap's death on his conscience.

"Insomnia," based on a Norwegian film of that name by Erik Skjoldbjaerg — pronounce and spell that correctly and you, too, can win a lifetime supply of lutefisk — uses a screenplay shorn of excessive cop-isms and fancy-shmancy theorizing, to explore both the tormented mind of the detective and the seemingly rational but manifestly perverted mind of the writer, Finch. Finch saw what went down when Dormer shot Hap, he knows how to play to Dormer's fear of exposure buried not too far under the brusque professional carapace of his policeman's procedural correctness. In short order the movie becomes not just your standard cat and mouse game, however slick, but something more: It becomes a kind of dance of the egos between two powerful, troubled men, each knowing the most significant fact about each other.

But even undeniable facts — Dormer shot Hap; Finch slaughtered the girl — don't always equate to undeniable truth, and "Insomnia's" fineness is embedded in that lack of absolute certainly. Hilary Swank's Ellie is more skillful than her pretty perkiness suggests, and she plays a decisive role in the climax, which is jolting, intense, but not unexpected.

Al Pacino hasn't been with us as often of late as we might have liked. His work here shows, again, what we miss by those absences. He looks a mess, his character is world-weary to the point of Weltschmerz, and we can't take our eyes off him. Robin Williams, who has spent too much time on screen being cuddly, then countered that with the unfortunate "Death to Smoochy," finds a perfect middle ground here: His Finch seems the soul of normality but is truly a warped monster. Monsters, we should remind ourselves now and then, often seem like your friendly Rotarian neighbor. They probably are rarely troubled by insomnia.

Feathery ferns for the garden

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

The month of May is a magical time in our New England woodlands. As tiny, tender leaves slowly unfurl in the overhead canopy, wonderful woodland wildflowers spring to life and bloom with gusto while the warmth of the sun still filters through the lacy green veil above. Lovely lady slippers, handsome jack-in-the-pulpits, and a diversity of tantalizing trilliums offer the observant wanderer a glimpse of Mother Nature's remarkable handiwork, each flower unique and unforgettable when discovered growing through the moist leaf litter.

I have a special fondness for woodland flora having spent my early childhood in the Catskill Mountains of New York. I would spend hours alongside a meandering stream watching the cool, crystal clear water spill over the mossy rocks. I recall vast expanses of feathery ferns carpeting the forest floor and still delight in the sight of a cluster of furry fiddleheads as they begin to unfurl. Spring often finds me sprawled on the ground with camera in hand attempting to recapture this fond recollection of plump, fuzzy curlicues emerging from the soft, moist earth.

The majority of ferns prefer rich, moist organic soils in part to full shade making them superb companions to nearly all shade-loving plants. Their handsome, lacy foliage provides delightful textural contrast to the broad leaves of hostas, hellebores, epimediums, Solomon's seal, and lungworts. Unfurling fern fronds are quite delicate and can be easily injured requiring that ferns be transplanted in early spring before their fronds begin to expand or after the leaves have fully formed and hardened off later in the spring prior to summer heat.

Our ferns are ancient, primitive plants that do not flower, reproducing instead by spores that form on fertile leaves that may or may not appear the same as the sterile leaves. In some species the fertile leaves are very distinctly different as in our native sensitive fern (Onoclea sensibilis) whose fertile leaves appear as stalks bearing tiny, hard beads which persist as a stiff, dried stems long after the tender sterile leaves have succumbed to the first frost. Cinnamon ferns (Osmunda cinnamomoea) send up their cinnamon-colored fertile fronds from the center of the clump early in the spring, followed later by furry, beige fiddleheads that eventually produce the typical sterile green leaves.

While there are some ferns that will tolerate drier environments once established, their stature will be considerably reduced and shady, moist locales should be provided. Some species will survive even in sunny spots given damp, boggy environments and a stand of royal ferns (Osmunda regalis) is truly elegant alongside a pond.

Although many ferns look similar at first glance, a close inspection will often reveal distinct variations. Some species have fairly simple fronds while others present a very lacy appearance due to multiple divisions of the leaves. A few are reliably evergreen in our area including the handsome Christmas fern (Polystichum acrostichoides), a long-lived deep, rich green fern growing 2 to 3 feet in height. Tolerant of deep shade, the previous year's leaves often sprawl by winter's end, especially in years of abundant snowfall and I usually trim these away when the new growth hardens off.

Our native Lady Fern (Athyrium Filix-femina) has delicately cut, tender, light green fronds in contrast to the dark, firm, almost leathery leaves of the evergreen Male Fern (Dryopteris Filix-mas). Some variations are available in both these species including some rather unique crested types where the tips of the leaflets are split giving the clump an even lacier appearance. Both these ferns are somewhat more tolerant of drier conditions.

For a dense, mat-forming, ground cover fern in sun, shade, wet or dry conditions, the hay-scented fern (Dennstaedtia punctilobula) has no rival. This 18-inch native found its way into my garden many years ago and aggressively spread its tough black rhizomes throughout the garden. An ideal fern for naturalizing in difficult locales, it does best in bright light and should be transplanted in fall like a piece of sod, as small divisions may not survive.

For a dramatic accent in a permanently damp, shady site, the 6-foot tall Ostrich Fern (Matteuccia pensylvanica) is a good choice. The sterile bronze fronds are late to appear in spring and the stiff fertile leaves, which are only half as tall as the earlier sterile leaves, are not likely to appear until the latter half of June.

Perhaps my two favorite ferns for my shady borders are the delicate Maidenhair Fern (Adiantum pedatum) and the Japanese Painted Fern (Athyrium nipponicum 'Pictum'). The wiry black stems of the Maidenhair fern grow to about a foot in height producing soft gray green foliage that become light green as the leaves mature with black midribs. The Japanese Painted Fern furnishes a unique, appealing blend of metallic silver, blue, green and burgundy, its 18-inch fronds appear in mid-May. Truly a star in its own right, I adore it planted among the lovely bronze and purple-tinted leaves of the new strains of coral bells (Heuchera) including H. 'Palace Purple', H. 'Plum Pudding', and H. 'Stormy Seas' and with blue hostas. Both these ferns prefer moist, well-drained soils in dappled shade throughout the day or morning sun and afternoon shade.

Foliage becomes the primary player in the shady garden, especially by midsummer, and few plants add the pattern, texture and delicacy of the lacy ferns.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, MAY 29

The Capricorn moon opposes Jupiter at 7:46 a.m. and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. Zero in on jobs that need to be redone, repaired and finish old business. You can be most productive. Although this is not a favorable time for launching new business ventures, it is ideal for researching and reviewing your options.

THURSDAY, MAY 30

'Expect the unexpected' is the motto for the next few days. The moon enters Aquarius at 9:35 a.m., traveling there until Saturday evening. Uranus, the planetary ruler of Aquarius, is slowing its rate of motion, preparing for retrograde travel. Keep it light; maintain a sense of humor. This can be a fun period if you are vacationing or don't have much to do. On the other hand, if you are working, and you must be productive, it can be most frustrating.

FRIDAY, MAY 31

Yesterday's advice applies to today as well. The Aquarius moon interacts with the sun, Neptune, Pluto and Saturn. In addition, the sun prepares to form a harmonious contact to Neptune, advising you to mellow out, go with the flow. Group-oriented projects get the green light. You can make gains working with others to achieve common goals. Chat, surf, network. Let fun and games top your agenda this evening.

SATURDAY, JUNE 1, 2002

The first ten days of June are action-packed. Uranus turns retrograde June 2; Mercury turns direct June 8, and a solar eclipse/new moon culminates June 10. Mid-June brings an opportunity to rest and regroup before planetary action heats up again, when a lunar eclipse/full moon arrives on June 24. Today the combination of an Aquarius moon and sun/Neptune alignment prompts you to follow your bliss. Take a break from stress, worry; enjoy favorite pastimes, friends. The Aquarius moon becomes inactive at 5:19 p.m. until 7:37 p.m., when it enters Pisces.

SUNDAY, JUNE 2

The freedom-loving planet Uranus takes the spotlight today. At 8:12 p.m. Uranus, standing at 29-degrees Aquarius, begins retrograde travel. Expect the unexpected. The moon continues to travel in Pisces, and the last quarter phase occurs at 8:05 p.m. This planetary combination makes for a 'fun and games' kind of day. On the other hand, if you have work projects to accomplish, it can be most frustrating.

MONDAY, JUNE 3

It may be difficult to focus on work and practical matters today. An alignment of Venus and Jupiter continues to generate a fun-loving, freewheeling kind of mood. At 6:58 a.m. the Pisces moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. If you are working, finish old jobs rather than starting new ones. You can make gains developing projects that need moral or financial support from others. Get extra rest tonight.

TUESDAY, JUNE 4

The moon enters fiery Aries at 7:51 a.m. Plan to channel high energy constructively. Tackle jobs that have been left hanging and finish them. Others may be impulsive, aggressive, combative. Don't make waves. Slow your pace between 3:42-6:42 p.m., when the moon aligns with Mars. Stay alert and use common sense.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 5

Gear up for a hectic day. The Aries moon forms six major alignments to planets. Stop, look and listen. Move cautiously in business or romance. Pay attention to details in order to avoid making careless errors. Tackle jobs that need redoing, repainting, repair. Keep your nose to the grindstone. Hard work will pay off.

window, a cupola which overlooks all of Norwell Center and a wall that lifts with enormous wooden pulleys and granite counterweights. The family added handholds to this barn to create a rock-climbing wall for their children.

Bailey said all of the barn owners have been very generous in opening their property for the cause. The South Shore Therapeutic Riding Program has given smiles and physical therapy in the firm of horseback riding to hundreds of disabled children.

Tickets for the tour, which runs from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. on June 1, are $15 and available at Fitts Mill in Scituate, MugShots in Norwell, Chandler Gas in Marshfield, the Family Pet and Garden Center in Pembroke, the Whole Magdelena and ZuZu's in Hingham and at the Cushing Center in Norwell on the day of the tour. For those that bring children on the tour, animals in the barns are for viewing, not for petting or feeding. For more information, call 781-826-4970.

While some of the barns are large, some small, some on major routes driven everyday and some tucked away, all the barns have something in common, according to Bailey — real-life use.

MAKE SURE A LEFT TURN ISN'T A TURN FOR THE WORSE
Turning Left – Cars or trucks turning left in front of an oncoming motorcycle cause many crashes. It is often difficult for a driver to see a motorcycle coming through traffic and judge the motorcyclist's speed. Before making a left turn, look twice at an approaching motorcycle and make sure it is safe to proceed.

Tweaking the town common

30 changes outlined

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Realigning Jason Road with Depot Court, moving the Christmas Tree, and changing the driveways at Town Hall were just a few recommendations that won some support at a special common workshop.

The Cohasset Common Landscape Preservation Committee along with the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation and the architectural firm of Carr Lynch/Denig Herman and Sandell, Inc., which is recommending a handful of changes to the common, provided residents with a chance to voice their opinions on the suggestions last week.

The results of the workshop survey that are now available demonstrated which areas residents were most concerned with. Based on a scoring system of one being very negative and five being very positive, the group of suggestions which received the highest approval rating was proposed changes to the Town Hall area, with an average score of 4.2.

Some of the recommendations include replacing the road which splits the common with a walkway similar to the others on the common, and replacing the drive-through pull-off in front of Town Hall with a more standard pull-out system which would create more of a green space in front of the area. The focus of these recommendations is to devise a better overall parking situation.

Survivor star may pay town a visit

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

While the Mariner hasn't been contacted by CBS, rumors are flying around town that Survivor 5 could be staged on the rocky terrain of Cohasset or the sandy shore of Bassing Beach. Residents are encouraged to start practicing their survival skills.

Just kidding. But the word is Cohasset could have a visit from a real-life TV survivor. Although Kathy Vavrick-O'Brien finished third in the hit show, she is sure to

Seniors to take next step

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

While Saturday may just be another beautiful day for some of the residents of Cohasset — it will have added importance for at least 81 teenagers. Cigars will be lit, flowers will be bought and gifts will be exchanged as the Class of 2002 gets rewarded for four years of hard work.

This year's seniors at Cohasset Middle-High School will get their diplomas on Saturday, June 8 at 1:30 p.m. at the Music Circus. The significant event will take place rain or shine as the ceremony will be shielded from the elements by the big tent.

CMHS Principal Michael Jones said he will remember the members of this year's class for their sense of humor, their athleticism and their academic achievements.

"They're just a great bunch of kids," Jones said. "The senior show in particular stands out when they put on a series of skits and performances that showed them to be wonderful comedians."

Along with its humor, Jones said the class excelled in other extra-curricular activities. There were students who made the all-state chorus, and the drama group, which included a number of seniors, qualified for the state finals for the first time.

"They seem to handle themselves very well," Jones said. "They're a lot of fun, I never get tired of them."The graduation, which is expected to last a little over an hour, will feature the first class to walk across the stage at the Music Circus since the events of Sept. 11.

"It was a very eventful year for the world and for these kids," Jones said. "The world they'll be embracing as graduates is very different from the one they entered as freshmen."

Jones added he saw a resurgence of patriotism and civic duty from the senior class as the year progressed.

Private ways a public issue

Pros, cons to be looked at again

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

An issue placed on the back burner for the last couple years is about to make its return. Selectman Merle Brown, who was instrumental in forming the Private Way Committee some eight years ago, said he is talking with Town Planner Liz Harrington on resurrecting the board.

"It's a very slow process," Brown said. "I think we're going into it with better knowledge now."

The public/private way debate centers over a few issues. If a street is determined to be private it loses the chance for town and state funding for its upkeep. The money then comes from a fund the town has created, often significantly less that what the state could provide.

The residents, or sometimes a contractor, on a private way essentially own the street and are responsible for its maintenance. Another aspect concerning private ways is that residents who live on them often complain they pay the same amount of taxes as other residents but see less care taken of their roads.

Public ways fall under the town's domain. The roads are maintained using Chapter 90 funding based on a formula the state has created. Seventy-five percent of the calculation depends on how many miles of accepted roads there are in a town, 12.5 percent is based on population, and the remaining 12.5 percent is based on the number of residents that work in a town.

There are currently about 11 miles of private ways in Cohasset, spanning about 80 streets.

In 1998, the Private Ways Committee recommended 12 roads to be considered for acceptance into public domain. The list included

Runway will make plane noise worse, Dormizter says

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The airplanes you might have heard in your dreams at night may not be attributed solely to an active imagination.

According to a noise monitor installed on King Street by Massport on April 12, Cohasset is experiencing noise levels well above the FAA standard for acceptable residential noise.

During the first weekend in April the noise monitor was available — it registered 300 noise events above 65 decibels — 25 times louder than normal background levels and above the FAA standard. The following week it registered 500 events. The monitor was placed in an area with low ambient noise and Massport was able to identify the hundreds of events as planes after ruling out other disturbances such as vehicle traffic or lawnmowers.

"It's unbelievable how big this problem is now and how much it could grow," said Ralph Dormitzer, a member of the South Shore Jet Pollution Council, who has been championing the cause for Cohasset.

Dormitzer informed selectmen Tuesday of his current efforts to stop a proposed runway at Logan.

The runway, 14/32, is expected to cause numerous problems for Cohasset residents. According to Dormitzer, the number of flights would increase over Cohasset, from 630 to 970 a day, if runway 14/32 became a reality. He also identified the impacts the runway would have on residents, which includes sleep deprivation, anxiety and a possible loss of property value.

Dormitzer said Massport has refused to provide any additional data about the noise monitoring at this time but have agreed to provide Cohasset with a Sound Exposure Level report in two months.

> "We need to get anybody and everybody involved in this."
> — Selectman Merle Brown

"This report will identify the intensity and duration of each noise event by plane type, altitude and by runway in use," he said.

Selectmen agreed that something needed to be done.

"We need to get anybody and everybody involved in this," said Selectman Merle Brown. "This is a serious problem.

The selectmen are planning to invite the town's legislative delegation into a future meeting to discuss the best plan of attack to stop the runway.

"I don't think we're doing enough politically," said Mike Sullivan, chairman of the board. "Let's get Bradley, Hedlund, and Delahunt in here."

Dormitzer also updated the board on the state of the lawsuit Cohasset has joined along with Hull and Hingham to try and stop the runway. The suit alleges deceit on the part of Massport, and said it knowingly filed false information in its environmental impact report. At Town Meeting in March, voters appropriated $30,000 toward the suit which brought Cohasset's involvement to $78,500. (The initial $48,500 was for a review of the environmental impact report on the proposed runway that has become the basis for the lawsuit).

The case goes to trial on Oct. 7, 2002 and discovery, interrogatories and depositions are underway.

Another avenue to pollution council is trying to pursue is diverting the extra planes over the water, therefore limiting their impact on Massachusetts towns. Dormitzer said he recently had discussions with Jane Garvey, the Federal FAA administrator, and was initially optimistic she would support the group's recommendations. However, he recently received a letter from her office referring the suggestions back to the interim regional director of the FAA in Burlington.

"This is not good news," he said. "The director has not been in favor of this plan in the past."

Dormitzer said the poilution council has also joined with Boston, Chelsea, Somerville, and Winthrop in a lawsuit to keep a 1976 injunction against Logan expansion in place. The group has prevailed against Massport's motion to dismiss the injunction and the trial for that case is set for Jan. 9, 2003.

Sewer rate raise is coming soon

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Residents, who are connected to the sewer system, can expect a letter in their mailboxes from the Sewer Commission in the coming days.

The letter serves to inform those residents that effective July 1, the rates for sewer use will increase due to the Sewer Enterprise Fund as established by the spring Town Meeting of 2001.

Although the rate change is to begin at the start of next month, residents won't see a change in their bills until October.

The average household will see a increase in their bill of a little more than $100.

The intent of the fund is to put future operation and investments in the municipal sewer into more of a self-sustaining "Pay as you Use" mode.

Currently, the commission goes before Town Meeting for the appropriation of any money, which can include small maintenance issues.

"Normally when work is done on the system we'd have to get approval from Town Meeting which would always put the burden on all taxpayers," said Sewer Commission Chairman Gary Vanderweil. "Now the money will be kept in a separate account and will have the opportunity to gain interest."

The money from the Enterprise fund will also be derived solely from users of the system and will not have an effect on the entire town.

The difference in the old and new rate structure is that the new rates include a depreciation allowance to partially account for the aging of the system and foreseeable component replacements. The annual depreciation allowance for fiscal year 2003 amounts to approximately $111 per dwelling in the Central Cohasset District and about $103 in the North district. In other words, the average household will see a increase in their bill of a little more than $100.

A typical residence is estimated to have total annual sewer use charges of approximately $634 in central Cohasset and $663 for north Cohasset.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said creating the enterprise fund allows the commission to be self-sufficient.

"It allows them to set aside 'x' amount of dollars every years so they already have the money when they need it," he said.

Haddad added the Sewer Commission will still have to go before Town Meeting to get approval to take money from the fund.

Zoning proposals sought by July 8

The Zoning Advisory Committee (ZAC) will accept proposed zoning amendments for analysis and recommendation to the Planning Board until July 8. Please submit a brief description of your zoning change and/or draft language by fax 781-383-7087; email: ebhtownplanner@aol.com; or mail to the Planning Board at Town Hall.

The purpose of the ZAC is to study and report periodically to the Planning Board to recommend updates to the zoning bylaw and zoning map. Given the level of interest from various boards, commissions and individuals regarding possible zoning changes, the ZAC will place an annual call for zoning proposals. A submission deadline several months in advance of town meeting enables the ZAC adequate time to provide thoughtful recommendations to the Planning Board for possible town meeting action.

The ZAC is an ad-hoc committee of the Planning Board consisting of the following members: Al Moore, Planning Board; Ben Lacy, Zoning Board;; Merle Brown, Board of Selectmen; Veneta Roebuck, Conservation Commission; Rich Henderson, Citizen Member; Mark DeGiacomo, Citizen Member; Liz Harrington, Town Planner; and Bob Egan, Building Commissioner.

Relay recognizes team effort

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The tents are down, the music has stopped, and the walkers are no longer pacing around the track — but Cohasset's Relay For Life is still going strong.

At a recent wrapup meeting, awards were presented to the following Cohasset-based teams:

- highest overall fundraising, presented to Lee Anne and Deb's Team which raised $25,235
- the highest individual fundraiser, presented to Kari O'Donnell who raised $3,030
- best decorated campsite went to Team 1-4-3.

"It's really great to see people unite for a cause as important as this."

— Kate Langstone, American Cancer Society

The Beach Bums of Hull were awarded Most Team Spirit and the Highest Team Member Average Award went to Dave's Team of Hingham. Members of this team raised an average of $534.18.

"This event is so succesful because of the enthusiasm of those who participate in it," said Kate Langstone, regional executive for communications for the American Cancer Society. "It's really great to see people unite for a cause as important as this."

The American Cancer Society's Relay For Life brought together 30 teams of families, friends, students, churches, neighborhoods, and businesses from Cohasset and surrounding towns on May 17 through 18 at the Cohasset High School track. The event drew almost 700 people to the high school.

Relay For Life is the American Cancer Society's largest signature event as well as the most successful national fundraiser. Each team keeps a continuous presence on the track throughout the day and night, walking in shifts.

More than $131,000 has been raised for this year's event thus far for American Cancer Society programs of research, education, advocacy and local patient services.

While the society is a nationwide organization it does offer local services. They include transportation for cancer patients to treatments through Road to Recovery, a one-on-one support for women with breast cancer through Reach to Recovery, and cosmetologist consultations for women being treated for cancer through the Look Good, Feel Better program.

The American Cancer Society is the community-based non-profit health organization dedicated to eliminating cancer as a major health problem by preventing the disease, saving lives and diminishing suffering from cancer through research, education, advocacy and service.

For more information about Relay For Life or to find out how to volunteer for the 2003 Planning Committee, please call Mary Shepherd at the American Cancer Society at 1-888-648-4880 and press 3 for ext. 229 or email at Mary.Shepherd@cancer.org.

Dean Rizzo, the executive director for the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, said the response from residents will be given to the Common Historic District Commission which will review the comments.

"I was surprised to see the Jason Road realignment got so much support," Rizzo said. "With the village improvements coming it may be something we could do in the near future."

Those suggestions include realigning Jason Road with Depot Court, clearing some rocky ledge in the area and relocating or redesigning the bus shelter on North Main Street.

Rizzo added that the recommendations have no timetable and could be completed in a couple years to 20 years.

While the Jason Road changes received a lot of support, other suggested improvements to the common garnered little. Residents gave the ideas of a brick sidewalk around the area, pedestrian-scale post lighting and a stone seating wall around the pond an average rank of 3.3 on the five-point scale.

However the single most popular recommendation was relocating the Christmas tree which stands in the center of the common.

These results were obtained in a workshop conducted last Wednesday, when about 30 residents listened to a presentation and then completed the survey, which asked them to rank various recommendations.

The meeting began with Nancy Sandell taking residents through the history of the common from the 18th century, to the present.

In the 1700s, when the common was a plain — the area had a few scattered residences on what is now North Main Street but was primarily used as a place for cattle to graze.

"I was surprised to see the Jason Road realignment got so much support."

— Dean Rizzo, CRC director

During the early 1800s the common saw more structures including the construction of a meetinghouse, which is now the Second Congregational Church. During this era, Highland Avenue was also established along with a few cow paths that cut from Highland Avenue to Main Street.

In the latter half of the 19th century, there was development on the south end of the common along with a flag pole placed in the area.

In the early 1900s the common experienced significant change including the installation of electric and phone wires in the area, and the construction of Town Hall. The pond also experienced its first makeover when it was paved during these years.

It wasn't until the second half of the 1900s when the roadways around the common were paved and the Revolutionary War memorial was established on the south end.

Changes in recent years include the addition of private driveways off the common and the installation of the bus stop on North Main Street.

The theme of the presentation was a simple one, that the common has undergone changes in the past and this may be a time to alter the area again.

"We've lost a degree of simplicity on the common over the years," Sandell said. "The changes seem pretty benign while they're happening but they really add up."

After the historical look at the common, Sandell outlined the almost 30 improvements for the area and offered them up for discussion. The positive feedback on the surveys didn't necessarily reflect the opinions some expressed during the meeting.

"We could debate this for hours and hours and just run in circles," said Susan O'Brien. "Why are we changing the common? The common is wonderful."

Another concerned resident said she wants the changes to be accommodating to all the people in town.

Bates Lane, Forest Notch, Lantern Lane, Locust Road, Norfolk Road, Reservoir Road, Riverview Drive, Rocky Lane, Short Street, Whitney Woods Lane, and Norman Todd Road. Of those, five of them, Forest Notch, Norfolk Road, Reservoir Road, Short Street and Rocky Lane were accepted at Special Town Meeting in 1998.

The problems that plagued the former private ways committee ran the gamut. From zoning issues to concerned residents, the hard working board faced many obstacles.

Planning Board chairman Al Moore, said changing roads from private to public could create more problems than it solves. He said the disadvantage of declaring a street public is that development could more easily take place. For any subdivisions or development, frontage is required on an accepted public way. While it is still possible to develop on a private way, it is significantly more difficult.

"As a practical matter it doesn't make a huge difference between the two," Moore said. "But there are a lot of little issues that could bite you if you aren't real careful with this."

Accepting private ways from public ones is a fairly lengthy process.

"There are a lot of little issues that could bite you if you aren't real careful with this."

— Al Moore, Planning Board

First, the road under consideration must be surveyed and then thoroughly researched to determine who owns the road..

Then, the Planning Board must hold a hearing on the suitability of the road in question followed by a selectmen's hearing to determine whether the road serves the public's interest.

Next, town meeting must approve money to acquire the property.

Planning Board member Bob Sturdy said some of the private ways in town don't meet established standards and would benefit from becoming public ways. Although the Department of Public Works is required to plow any road with three or more houses for safety purposes, the town is not responsible for its maintenance. However, it has been Cohasset's practice to at least hot-top (putting a layer of asphalt on troubled roads) private ways.

Sturdy added boosting the mileage of accepted public roads would make the town eligible for more state aid and enable the town to use state funds for repaying these roads but converting too many private roads to public ones could open the door for unwanted development.

"The town is responsible for all public ways but maintains the private ways as well," Sturdy said

Brown said enough time has passed and enough information has come forth to start examining this issue again.

"I want to get involved with this and look at some of the roads that shouldn't pose a problem to convert," he said.

Survivor star may pay town a visit

finish first in Cohasset.

The Survivor star, who outsmarted and outlasted 13 other contestants, is a CHS graduate and has preliminary plans to come to town the weekend of June 28.

Jennifer Piepenbrink, the Cohasset Mariner around town reporter, has been communicating with Vavrick-O'Brien for some time now and recently received an e-mail in which Vavrick-O'Brien said she and her son would be coming to town.

Vavrick-O'Brien wants to be involved in a charity event and initial speculation is she would help the Sailing Club raise funds. There is also the possibility that she and her son would stay at the Red Lion Inn, but nothing is confirmed.

Would she take a group of Cohasset survivors to Bassing Beach to participate in an immunity challenge? Maybe she'll oversee a raft building contest off of Sandy Beach. Or maybe she'll teach shelter building on the rocky ledge on the south side of the common.

But everyone hopes she won't host a rodent-eating challenge or an endurance test in which residents would have to stand in the same position for hours at a time.

Kathy Vavrick-O'Brien

Whatever the eventual event is, Vavrick-O'Brien's return to Cohasset should exciting. Not since the feature film "House Sitter" that starred Steve Martin and Goldie Hawn has the town gotten so close to a well-known celebrity.

Vavrick-O'Brien transferred to Cohasset High School in 1971 and was a cheerleader for her two years in high school here. In her senior yearbook quotes, she lists "being content in a little house in San Francisco" as her ambition and her favorite expression as "ahhhh - neat." She was also part of the homecoming court in her senior year.

In a previous interview, Vavrick-O'Brien said she fondly remembered her days in Cohasset. She said she most vividly remembers going to the beach, sailing out of the harbor, pool hopping at night and attending shows at the Music Circus.

"I'm so proud of being from Cohasset," she said. "I miss it."

According to CBS's Web site, Vavrick-O'Brien currently works as a real estate agent in her hometown of Burlington, Vt.

Before that she was self-employed and ran a small art products store and an event planning business. In 1998, she biked across the United States for the American Lung Association in memory of her father. She is divorced and has one son who had a cameo on the show.

Vavrick-O'Brien was one of 16 people selected out of 50,000 to compete for the $1 million prize.

Seniors to take next step Saturday

He said the seniors handled the tragedy as well as they possibly could and set an example for the younger grades.

Along with Jones, there will be four other speakers. Class president Robin Murphy will speak along with valedictorian Katharine Marie-Grimm, salutatorian Megen Laura McCain and Supt. Edward Malvey.

Malvey said he's looking forward to graduation day.

"It's a great group of students we're graduating," he said. "They've distinguished themselves both academically and in extra-curricular endeavors."

He is also pleased such a high percentage of the class is pursuing education beyond high school.

"The world they'll be embracing as graduates is very different from the one they entered as freshmen."

— Principal Michael Jones

"It's always nice to see students want to continue their education," Malvey said. "It's a credit to our teachers as well as the kids."

Murphy, the class president, said his class has defined itself through academic achievements and athletic accomplishments.

"Just look at the schools we've gotten into and scores we've gotten on both the MCAS and SATs," Murphy said. "We've had post-season success in seven sports."

School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn, who will attend his first graduation as chairman and will hand the diplomas to the students, said he knows several of the students personally and feels it's a great class.

"It's good to seem them go through the system," Flynn said. "It's nice to keep things moving."

Rabbi Karol leaving Hingham temple after 20 years

By Susan Hagstrom
CORRESPONDENT

After two decades of service, Rabbi Stephen Karol will say shalom, to his friends, neighbors, colleagues and congregation. Karol has been the Rabbi at Hingham's Congregation Sha'aray Shalom since 1981. Karol, wife Mary and daughter Samantha are excited about a move to Stony Brook, N.Y. but will leave Hingham with many happy memories and a sense of accomplishment.

Karol, 51, received a bachelor's degree in sociology from the University of Wisconsin and then went on to study in Jerusalem and at the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati before being ordained in 1977. After spending four years in Buffalo, N.Y. as an assistant rabbi and then an associate rabbi, Karol went on a vacation to Cape Cod.

"I had decided that it was time to look for a new congregation," Karol explained. "Mary and I came to the Cape and we loved it. We spent some time in Boston and when I returned to Buffalo, a placement newsletter was waiting for me. It had information about a congregation on the South Shore of Boston looking for a rabbi. It was an opportunity for me to be a head rabbi; that's what I had been training to do. It was exactly what I wanted."

In 1981, Congregation Sha'aray Shalom had about 130 families. As the new rabbi, Karol was busy performing all of the required tasks. He led weekly services, worked with the lay leaders of the congregation and officiated at life cycle events. Unlike some other rabbis, he also served as principal of the religious school, taught Hebrew class and tutored students who were preparing to become a Bar or Bat Mitzvah.

During Karol's tenure, he was active in a project that brought a Soviet family to America. He also originated a Human Resources Inventory to help those in crisis and established Shasty, the teen youth group.

"The word Rabbi means teacher and we've all had the opportunity to learn what a great teacher Steve is."

—The Rev. Ken Read-Brown, friend and colleague

Karol acted as a representative of the congregation in the larger religious community and became an active member in the Hingham/Hull Religious Leaders Association. The group provides a forum for leaders of different religions to plan events and discuss ways to enhance mutual respect. The group is responsible for events such as the annual Community Thanksgiving Service and Interfaith Seder.

"It seemed natural for me to do interfaith work," Karol said. "We try to reach out to other communities and emphasize what we have in common. The group is a great example of how mutual respect has a positive effect on people."

Karol's friends and colleagues in the group say he was a wonderful asset to the group and his participation will be sorely missed.

"The word Rabbi means teacher and we've all had the opportunity to learn what a great teacher he (Karol) is," said the Reverend Ken Read-Brown, minister at Hingham's Old Ship Church. "Steve is both a teacher and an advocate. He speaks the truth clearly and invites others to be brought in instead of drawing a line and shutting people out. He'll be missed greatly.

"In a profound sense, although his congregation will find another rabbi, you can't replace a person," Read-Brown said. "He has developed deep roots in our community and those will not quickly be replaced. I'll miss him as person and as a friend. He was always someone I could count on and we, our whole community, are better for his having been here."

Over the past 21 years, Karol said he has developed with the members of the congregation. The number of families grew to nearly 300 and Karol made it his goal to know each member's name. He taught adult education classes, was involved in outreach and social action. Even after a full-time director of education was hired, Rabbi Karol remained active in the religious school. He taught the Confirmation class and took them on an annual trip to New York City. Because he has been there so long, he has had the opportunity to watch many students grow and mature; some, all the way from infancy to adulthood.

"One of the reasons that I decided to become a rabbi is that I wanted to do something that I felt made a positive difference in people's lives. Over the years, I've been fortunate to have had that feeling a lot," Karol smiled. "It's great. It's like a dream come true. Kids have come back to me when they graduate from college or wanting me to officiate at their wedding. I may not have been the major influence in their life but it has been a privilege to have been an influence at all."

One of the families influenced by the rabbi is the Carr family of Hingham. Joan Carr has been a temple member since 1974 and served as the director of education from 1988 until this past year. Carr said that Karol brought many strengths to his position, including his sense of commitment to adult education, and she will miss that and much more.

"I have been blessed to have had a multi-faceted relationship with Rabbi Karol," Carr said. "He has been my rabbi, teacher, colleague, supervisor and friend. I will miss him on all those levels. Since he has been here for over 20 years, he knows my immediate and extended family very well. He watched my children grow up, has officiated at or otherwise participated in a myriad of life cycle events involving my family and has been there when we have had family crises. I will miss having a close relationship with a rabbi who has been an integral part of our family history."

Karol will begin his duties at Temple Isiah in July. He is excited about having the opportunity to lead a congregation of 400 families and get his family settled. Congregation Sha'aray Shalom will spend this year with an interim rabbi, and will continue the search for a permanent replacement. Until then, the congregation will say good bye and Mazel Tov to Karol and his family.

"When you leave a place that you've been for over two decades, you have to leave some things behind and that's hard to do," Karol reflected. "I'll miss the people. You can't take all of your friends with you but I'll keep all of the good memories with me. I'm confident that we'll keep in touch with people here and that we have a nice group of new friends waiting for us."

Karol honored

Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St. in Hingham will honor Rabbi Stephen A. Karol on Friday evening, June 7 at a special service beginning at 7:30 p.m. Also on Sunday, June 9, from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., there will be an open house at the Temple to provide the entire community a less-formal opportunity to wish the Karol family all the best on their move to Long Island.

There are other ways you can express your good wishes to Rabbi Karol. Please call the Temple office at 781-749-8103.

Let's start right off the bat by congratulating Britt Covell, daughter of John and Jill Covell, who was awarded a bachelor of science degree from Johnson & Wales University in Providence on May 18. Britt majored in retail marketing and management.

MASSASOIT GRADS

Two students from Massasoit Community College are from here in Cohasset, Deborah M. Casey and Michael C. Coates. Great work to both of you.

J. Robert Buckley, who majored in psychology, graduated from Colby-Sawyer College in New London, N.H. with a bachelor of arts degree.

RELAY FOR LIFE

I was able to attend two events last week, both of which were equally impressive. The first was the closing ceremony of the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life. The amazing work done by everyone involved with this organization and event is tremendous and because of the hard work put forward by team members and organizers, the total raised so far is $131,370! Any further donations may be sent to: The American Cancer Society, c/o Relay For Life in Cohasset, 1115 W. Chestnut Street, Brockton, MA 02301.

AFTER-PROM PARTY

The second event that was just unbelievable was the Senior Class "After Prom Party." This event is put on each year for the prom-goers to come to after the prom is over. The decorations, activities and excitement is all done by volunteers and let me tell you, it is a sight to behold. I was able to take part in the "Casino" and had so much fun talking with the kids and hearing about their magical evening and spend some time with them as they relaxed and enjoyed the night. My hats go off to all of the organizers and the hard work that was put into making this night spectacular. It was truly that and then some.

STRAWBERRY FEST, YUM!

Strawberry Season is here and the Second Congregational Church is busy preparing for its 14th Annual Strawberry Festival held alongside the South Shore Art Center's Festival On The Common, Friday June 14 through Sunday, June 16. This year's Strawberry Festival will include an outdoor cafe and nursery on the church grounds where Arts Festival visitors can rest and enjoy a menu including grilled chicken salads, hot dogs, fresh pastries and cold drinks. Just be sure to save room for the churches famous Strawberry Shortcake made with fresh local strawberries and whipped cream heaped over a delicious buttermilk biscuit. The Second Congregational Church will also hold a plant sale on Saturday, June 15 from 10 a.m.-2 p.m. at the front of the church. All proceeds from this Strawberry Festival cafe and plant sale will support local charities.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY, LEO!

Recently, the children of Leo Fiori, Sr. of Fiori's Exxon in Cohasset, held an 80th birthday party in his honor! Leo was thrilled and surprised to be surrounded by 120 friends and family at the American Legion Hall on Saturday, March 11, 2002. Presentations were given by Cohasset Selectman Fred Koed, State Representative Garrett Bradley, State Senator Bob Hedlund, and former Red Sox announcer Ken Coleman. A great time was had by all who attended!

Leo has owned the business located at the corner of Rte. 3A and Beechwood Street for the past 39 years, and though he has passed proprietorship onto his youngest son Bob, he still works there six days a week. He really enjoys the people that pass through everyday. Many locals stop by daily for their newspaper and coffee and to chat about the latest sports results. The proud party goers included; Bob and Arlene Fiori, Paul Fiori and Jay Fiori, all of Cohasset; and Leo and Dotty Fiori, Jr. and John and Tina(Fiori) Danielson of Scituate. What an honor for a wonderful man!

TALENTED MUSICIANS

This year's Spring Concert at the New England Conservatory in Boston featured two of Cohasset's talented young musicians. Mark Lehmann, a graduating senior at Cohasset High School played the violin for the last time with the String Chamber Orchestra. Mark has been studying and performing at NEC's Preparatory School throughout his High School career.

Just beginning her vocal studies at the New England Conservatory is sophomore, Marisa Mello. Marisa has been performing with the NEC Youth Chorale for just two years. Both students have toured with these amazing NEC Youth Ensembles. Mark has played in Europe and Marisa sang in Cuba last June.

This summer as Mark gets ready to head off to the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, Marisa will be touring Italy for ten days with the Youth Chorale of Greater Boston. Good luck to both of these creative young musicians.

Tony Lanier can capture people just as they are

Artist awarded cultural grant

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Have you ever been sitting on a bench in Boston Common, or been window shopping in Downtown Crossing, or just been walking the streets of Beacon Hill and seen someone taking your picture? Chances are, it could have been Anthony W. "Tony" Lanier.

Lanier likes to capture poses of everyday folk in natural states and then transfers the image from a print to a graphite drawing. His black and white drawings range from the more abstract, like the posturing of a ballerina, to the dead on, like his portrait of three firefighters.

The resident of South Main Street, recently received at $12,500 grant from the Massachusetts Cultural Center in its Artist Grant Program for his work.

"It's something I've been doing for some years now," he said. "I always knew this is something I wanted to do.."

Lanier, whose drawings are usually done on an 11 by 14-in. canvas, said he looks for certain gestures in a person from the way they are standing. He said he can take up to eight rolls of photographs in one day and has amassed tens of thousands of them over the years.

"I try to avoid engaging a person while I'm taking their picture," Lanier said. "When people act naturally you get some incredible stuff, it's so quick, but it's there."

Lanier often has to resort to composite drawings of his subjects, closing their mouths when it may have been open, or raising an arm to accentuate a pose. He also drops the background, deeming it unimportant in what he is trying to accomplish.

"That's when the artist part of me takes over, it's what makes me a drawer and not a photographer," Lanier said.

The Massachusetts Cultural Center saw the promise in his work and rewarded Lanier with the grant.

"We are committed to funding individual artists and maintain that the core of a vibrant, healthy society lies in the often-unheralded work artist perform day after day," the center stated in a letter to Lanier. "We wish you the very best in your future endeavors."

Lanier said it was really special to be recognized.

"It says you've made a contribution to the art world," he said. "I'll probably use the money to publish my drawings or investing in new supplies."

Lanier has dozens of portraits in his studio and plenty more adorning his walls most depicting women in various poses. He said that women, on average, have more interesting clothes with usually express themselves more subtlety then men.

"It's everything with women," he said. "The curves and folds and shadows are very unique."

After drawing all his life, Lanier said he still has room to improve on his techniques.

"Drawing is very pure and totally exposes you for who you are," he said. "With painting and other artistic expressions you can cover up what you do but with drawing you don't have that luxury."

Local artist Tony Lanier at the drawing board in his Cohasset studio.

Lanier often spends 30-50 hours on a drawing and said if he were to try to do them in color, that number could easily multiply.

"The one thing I'm really good at," he said. "Is making a drawing that I took days on look like it took me only 15 minutes."

Lanier said he has also become very adept at noticing a shot from far away. He has spent so much time examining people over the last four years, that he knows what he wants

"I want to capture people when they are unguarded," he said. "I want to try and get a picture of them when they are expressing their true selves."

Please join guest speaker William Patton for an entertaining and informative evening of armchair exploration. The lighthouses that stand sentry along the New England coast have witnessed raging storms and terrible tragedies. Patton will regale us with this and many other fascinating lighthouse tales during the lecture, which accompanies the museum's current exhibit, Beacons of Boston Harbor. Light refreshments will be available. For more information please contact Museum Educator, Victoria Stevens, at the museum, 781-925-5433.

A history lesson for the Class of 2002

The Class of 2002 will never forget Sept. 11, an event that has seared the consciousness of an entire younger generation. For older people, it was the Great Depression that formed how they view the world. For them, the fear of poverty, joblessness and deprivation guided many of the decisions they made in their lives.

Then there was what has been called "the greatest generation," those young men and women who fought in World War II, many of whom gave their lives in the fight against totalitarianism. Pearl Harbor and the unleashing of the atomic bomb on Japan were defining historical moments for them.

For those young people who came of age only a few years later, the Korean War marked the end of their youthful innocence.

In the 1960s, the attitudes of the younger generation were informed by the political assassinations of idealistic leaders, and the civil unrest brought on by the Vietnam War.

The '70s generation faced high unemployment, inflation, the disillusionment of the Watergate scandal and a country that seemed adrift.

The 1980s and '90s were a kind of euphoric bubble of prosperity for the country, interrupted briefly by a recession a decade ago that was quickly forgotten with the booming stock market that followed.

For today's young people, Sept. 11 must have come as a terrific shock, as it did to the rest of the nation. Nothing in their young lives could have prepared them for the reality that thousands of innocent civilians died in a surprise terrorist attack right here on American soil.

Listen to the graduation speeches that will be delivered in the next couple of weeks and you will hear this sense of total shock expressed over and over again.

The Class of 2002 will always remember exactly where they were and what they were doing the moment the planes hit their intended targets on Sept. 11. For them Sept. 11 is their Pearl Harbor and carries the same horror as the day almost 40 years ago that President John F. Kennedy was shot in Dallas.

If you listen to the words of these young people, Sept. 11 has stirred not only shock and horror, but a profound sense of gratitude for a democratic system of government that strives to protect human freedom and equal rights for all individuals.

The Class of 2002 has been made to realize how lucky they are to live in a country that values freedom and many of them are resolved to fight for those democratic ideals, just as generations before them have done.

For those who do not join the military, there is a quiet determination not to let terrorist enemies around the globe win this battle, a battle that could take years.

They are resolved to be courageous and go about living their lives in peace and freedom, keeping an open mind about other cultures and other ways of doing things.

They are determined to do their part to make the world a better, safer place. They do not give any indication of yielding to those who would destroy freedom and human dignity and who would kill innocent people for the sake of religion or any other reason.

The Class of 2002 has seen the future on Sept. 11, and they are prepared to meet the challenges just as their parents and grandparents have done before them.

Good luck to the Class of 2002. You are about to make history.

Curb concerns

TO THE EDITOR:

One of the rare and wonderful benefits of raising a family in Cohasset is that our young people can ride bikes with fairly predictable safety to their many activities: Scouts, Sailing Club, Yacht Club, Swim Center, ball fields, Community Center, library, schools, churches, doing paper routes, etc. And in good weather it appears that Cohasset is an all ages bike-riding town as well.

Cohasset does have some dangerous traffic on our two-lane streets: gravel trucks, moving vans, utility and delivery vehicles, oil trucks, cement mixers, "honey wagons", fire engines, speeding commuters. At present bike riders can escape danger by riding onto grassy shoulders, low-rise asphalt sidewalks, and over low curbs.

With the CRC proposals for sidewalks with layers of supporting structure and, as I read the specifications, for at least 6-inch granite curbs, and a couple of streets, including Elm Street, made narrower, and with emphasis on more parking spaces, I believe bike riders will be at greater risk. Should they attempt to jump the curbs (as boys are likely to do), run into a parked car, or skid against the curb and fall, they could be badly hurt or even thrown into the traffic path.

Mothers and others pushing strollers would also have a tougher time negotiating all the curbs.

CRC should be commended for initiating planning, which we certainly do need. And now, fortunately, serious official town planning is under way by impressively competent people. Both groups of planners have solicited citizen suggestions, questions, and comments. My comment is that sometimes well-intentioned improvements have unintended consequences. I hope my question of high curbs and narrower streets as safety hazards (that might affect our lifestyle) can be addressed.

Fundraiser was a great success

TO THE EDITOR:

The Carriage House Nursery School's gala fundraiser "Their First Steps To The Future" held Saturday, May 4 was a tremendous success. We raised over $30,000 – more than twice our goal.

Our success would not have been possible without the generosity and support of parents, friends and alumni/ae throughout the process. Many thanks go to you for contributing to this event thus allowing us to raise money for the children of the Carriage House Nursery School. You may already know that the event's proceeds will be used to purchase educational and playground equipment for the school.

A special "thank you" goes to many of the local businesses and individuals who supported the fundraising efforts and auction through donations and auction booklet advertisements: Adrian Morris Salon, Atlantica Restaurant & the Peter Roy Family, Barefoot Rugs, BayState Equipment, Bay Tower Room, Bernard's Restaurant, Borrowed Butler, Bridgeman's Restaurant, Buttonwood Books, Cohasset Collision Center, Cohasset Greenery, Deep Run Legal, Dependable Cleaners, Duxbury Bay Maritime School, Edison Light Beer, Farsh Oriental Rugs, Fitness First Plus, Global Travel, Grapevine Caterers, Homegoods/TJX Companies, Horizon Foods, Jacob Wirth Restaurant, John Cavanaro Consulting, Kerry Brett Hurley Photography, King Jewelers, Lapis Tree, Lily's Closet, Lisa Johnson Photography, Oasis Environmental Contracting Services, North River Framing, Paperscapes, ParTee Golf, Red Lion Inn, RPG (Really Great Pizza), Saparito's Florence Café, Siro's Beachside Restaurant, South Shore Music Circus, The Dazz, The Law Offices of Judith Kaplan, The Park Plaza Hotel, Vinette Day Spa, and many more.

I, along with the Parent Board, am thrilled at the support and generosity of the community of caring people like yourself who choose to make a difference in the lives of present and future students. Thank you once again for assisting us in educating the children on their path "to the future".

Volunteers thanked

TO THE EDITOR:

The Community Relations Committee of the Cohasset PSO would like to thank all of the volunteers who drove the Senior Shuttle this past year. Pat Sargent, who took the time to train all of the volunteers collectively, was also thanked and appreciated through a donation made in honor of her grandson, Jesse Sargent who passed away earlier this year. Pat sent a thank you note to all saying, "Dear Friends, I was so touched by your generous gift. You women are so kind and thoughtful. Thank you one and all." Love, Pat.

Thank you to the following ladies for the contribution given to the Shuttle Bus Service as drivers. Mary Goodwin, Nancy Teague, Shelanne Durkin, Mary Kay Richardson, Nancy Froio, Vicky Neaves, Sallyann Quebec, and Joanne Higgins.

Wrong direction of baseball diamonds

TO THE EDITOR:

For those who are seemingly critical of the points in my last letter, I received many positive responses regarding my point of view of the direction of the proposed baseball diamonds. In one, similar to many, Selectman Koed told me about witnessing a player blinded by the sun trying to catch a fly ball, then being hit in the mouth, the ball careening 10 feet in the air. Nice. Glad it wasn't my kid.

The letter was also about our community, which, like many, have sports programs which are taken over by self-appointed people. Many of these people were reportedly called by good-meaning folks to tell them about Bigelow's seminar, and, said they would attend. As stated, few, if any, showed. Those not there are your kids coaches, and their apathy is a big deal. For many this is the only education coaches get. Not attending belittled the well-meaning efforts of the PSO, Social Service League, and Bigelow himself. They knew it was important and spent time putting the event together.

The letter was also about the baseball diamonds which are going to be built in a way which will cause sun blindness to players. Is anybody influential on this project a qualified child care person with credentials placed on the line if there are faults? Who is trained and who is liable for bad design? Most codes and need for certifications resulted from faults found after accidents. Do we need one to understand this? Perhaps in the fundraising activities for the new diamonds, somebody will contribute brains and do what it takes to position the fields to minimize the known and predictable risk factor called the sun.

Focusing on the subject of baseball, other problems are apparent, too, to which I'd like to add additional data and further suggestion.

Last year I was told that use of the "F" word was used in the coaching of 12-year-olds in baseball. It must be community acceptable if those who exercise/allow such standards maintain coaching/administrative positions, as it certainly isn't recommended by Little League. The Little League has a set of rules, which seem to be quoted as convenient by league officials. The first page of rules states the Board should be elected by league membership. Cohasset's absence of elections is a problem. Ask the league. (eastregion@littleleague.org) Ask other experts on the subject. The league rules were established because the lack of rules did not carry out league ideals created by people qualified by some sort of certified recreational education. If you throw away expert guidance you are left with those who pick and choose the rules they want, and will eventually repeat the mistakes experts know to avoid. Unfortunately, this happens in many communities. We have a Recreational Department with an educated director and elected representatives. Maybe it's time to get our "money's worth" from them. I believe the field and language issues indicate that it's time for the self-appointed baseball hierarchy to be governed.

Remember, play serves the kids, but competition, architectural mumbo jumbo, and politics, serve the adults. The level and quality of adult involvement typifies the balance. You could have learned that from Bigelow, or from reading the books about the problems. For information on the real structure of Little League, go to www.littleleague.org. Don't want to offend your "friends" by citing rules? Would a friend hit or pitch balls to your kid with the sun in his/her eyes and swear to him/her?

I hope the "points" of my letter and the additional data may hit home with some people. Many state their kids have fun in sports. I'm glad. In fact, I'm looking to protect that interest. If people want to keep beating the messenger, the only wake-up will be a serious incident. Whose kid will it be? League members, those who sign their kid(s) up, can try to reform the system by insisting it operate by design, protecting the kids, or simply pray it won't be their kid whose mouth the ball bounces 10 feet off of, a scenario for which the position of the new fields is setting the stage to repeat.

Don't be a lone ranger and do it all yourself

GOOD VIBES

BOB WHITNEY

"Oh well, I'll do it myself." The words of an unappreciated mom, an exasperated teacher, or an overworked employee; sound familiar? — we have all been there and have experienced the frustration of this "abandoned" feeling. On the other hand, working in tandem with others, gives you the opportunity to share a common passion, take a risk, share a laugh or tear.

For an acquaintance of mine, John, the past few years have been very trying. He has experienced peaks and valleys unlike ever before in his life. John felt alone and disconnected from his friends. (Much like Tom Hanks in the movie, "Cast Away," marooned and alone on an island for many years.) However, even in John's darkest moments there was one friend that remained as his constant companion and source of hope, trust and courage. That friend for John was his spiritual partner — his higher power, good spirit, ray of hope, or his God—whatever you choose to call it.

What is most important is that you draw upon the power and energy of your spiritual partner and make it a part of your daily-living diet. Not just a place to find comfort or solace during those temporary moments of mental highs or deep dark lows, but a living partnership of positive possibilities filled with energy, hope and joy! This is the one permanent relationship that is so secure that it will set you free for healthier relationships.

...working in tandem with others, gives you the opportunity to share a common passion, take a risk, share a laugh or tear.

Here are a few simple steps for you to consider:

- Listen to your intuition (inner-voice) and draw upon your unique gifts that will best allow you to make a difference
- Prepare your own personal mission-statement which reflects these unique gifts and how you intend to best use them
- Make a commitment to continuous learning: attend courses offered for credit, workshops and seminars; mental exercise will renew and refresh
- Take action: allow and use your spiritual partner to monitor your progress, otherwise a year from now, you will find yourself in the same spot as today
- Take care of yourself: exercise, eat, sleep well, and find the time to help others achieve their dreams and goals.

So don't be a lone ranger and do things all alone! Start today and align yourself with your real spiritual partner and use that alliance to take positive and purposeful action. The journey is very long and tedious and it requires a bunch of persistence, focus and hard work. It becomes more enjoyable, more rewarding, and more meaningful when you have a partner to help you along the way.

Vermont cows are on parade

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

You've heard of the annual "Running of the Bulls" in Pamplona, Spain, of course.

Now get ready for the first annual "Strolling of the Heifers." It's happening this coming weekend in Brattleboro, Vermont.

Well, haven't they always said there are more cows than people in Vermont?

Brattleboro being the home of the Holstein Association, the strollers will be 30 Holstein cows in a parade led by Putney School students followed by the Black and White Heifer Ball.

I'm not sure who dances with who at the Heifer Ball. Do the people dance with cows or do cows dance with people?

I'm heartened to find that Vermont, after years of being known as the outback of New England, has decided to join the rest of us in promoting one of its outstanding tourist attractions.

Most of the folks that I know think of Vermont as miles and miles of ski run which you visit briefly and then go home with a broken leg or a jug of maple syrup, whichever comes first.

Vermont does have some things going for it besides cows, ski chalets and woods. For one thing, it's the birthplace of two presidents, both of whom fled the state almost as soon as they reached the age of reason.

Most of the folks that I know think of Vermont as miles and miles of ski run which you visit briefly and then go home with a broken leg or a jug of maple syrup.

Chester Arthur, the vice president who succeeded the unfortunate James Garfield, was born in North Fairfield, so close to the Canadian border that his political opponents spread the rumor he was born in Canada and thus ineligible for the presidency. He became a New Yorker.

His philosophy of the presidency would have served well a later president known by the initials B.C. "I may be president of the United States," Arthur said, "but my private life is nobody's damned business."

Calvin Coolidge, the vice president who succeeded the unfortunate Warren Harding, was born in Plymouth, but he chose to practice law in Northampton, Mass., and he stayed long enough to become governor of his adopted state.

He wasn't like most Bay State governors, though. Returning from church one Sunday, his wife, Grace, inquired as to the subject of the preacher's sermon. "Sin," said Cal. "What did he say about sin?" she asked. "He was agin it," said Cal. But I digress . . .

Vermont is the only New England state which lays claim to a Civil War battlefield of its very own. In fact, folks in St. Albans have been known to clean up on barroom bets by asking the questions: "What is the farthest north battle of the Civil War?" Their answer: "St. Albans."

On Wednesday, Oct. 19, 1864, a band of 25 Confederate soldiers under Lt. Bennett Young descended on the town of St. Albans from Canada, 15 miles away, killed one Vermonter, wounded several others, and slipped back in Canada with $200,000 stolen from three banks.

I hate to spoil it for Vermont's barroom bettors, but actually the farthest north battle of the Civil War was the naval engagement between the USS Kearsarge and the Confederate raider Alabama in the harbor of Cherbourg, France.

But they'll always have their cows.

HEALTH NOTES

West Nile Virus detected in state on May 21

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

On May 24, the Massachusetts Department of Public Health (MDPH) announced that an adult dead crow tested positive for West Nile Virus (WNV) at the State Laboratory Institute. The bird was found May 21 in Wakefield.

A representative of the MDPH stated, "Although WNV has been found early in the 2002 season, a single WNV-positive bird is not a prediction of the nature of the encephalitis season that will occur in Massachusetts. The MDPH Field Surveillance Team collects specimens regularly and MDPH will provide an early warning to the public should the risk of human disease arise this year."

The finding of WNV in Massachusetts this year is expected, although the infection of this single bird is earlier than the first indication of WNV activity last year. In 2001, a WNV-infected crow was found on July 8 in Andover. This year WNV activity already has been reported from other states with infected birds found in New York (1 crow), Pennsylvania (1 crow), District of Columbia (1 crow), Virginia (2 crows) and Florida (1 crow and 3 other species). The WNV-infected crow from Albany, N.Y. was found on May 1, and there have been no other infected birds found to date in New York.

The MDPH Mosquito-Borne Disease Surveillance Program (MDSP) field activities began a few days ago and mosquitoes and additional birds from the Wakefield area will be tested next week. There may not be many additional birds found with infections in late May and early June, but MDPH will be testing appropriate samples to identify virus activity wherever it may arise, and keep the public informed. The purpose of the MDSP is to provide early warning of the risk of human infection, and provide advisories on how to reduce the risk of infection.

Risk of human disease is low before the later summer season.

The Mass. Dept. of Public Health will provide an early warning to the public should the risk of human disease arise this year.

There are steps that the public can take now to reduce their risk of disease.

- Check window and door screens to assure they are in good repair.
- Remove standing water near homes, clean gutters and drains, change water in birdbaths every several days and properly maintain swimming pools.
- Take precautions to limit exposure to mosquitoes:
- Limit your time outdoors when you notice high levels of mosquito activity (biting); or if you remain outdoors, wear clothing that provides more coverage of your skin (such as long pants instead of shorts).
- Use mosquito repellents containing DEET. Follow label instructions for repellents, do not overuse (repeat applications should be limited to label recommendations) and use appropriate low concentration products for children. Repellents should not be used on infants.
- Mosquito netting can be used to cover carriages and playpens and sleeping areas.

In Massachusetts during 2001, the first indication of WNV activity occurred on July 8 when a crow found in Andover tested positive for the virus. The first isolation of WNV from mosquitoes was Aug. 17 from mosquitoes collected from Andover and Lowell. In all, a total of 1,104 dead birds and 25 mosquito pools tested positive for WNV in 2001.

There were three human cases of WNV encephalitis (in Acushnet, Dartmouth, Woburn), including one death of a 70-year-old Woburn man, all occurring in October or later. Additionally, an outbreak WNV infections in horses occurred in southeastern Massachusetts with 45 horses having laboratory confirmed WNV infection.

The 1,104 WNV positive dead birds were found in 153 of the state's 351 cities and towns and in nine of Massachusetts' 14 counties. A total of 1,339 birds and 6,340 mosquito pools representing nearly 84,000 mosquitoes were tested. And there was one human case of eastern equine encephalitis, another mosquito-borne viral disease, found in August in a young girl who was most likely exposed in southeastern Massachusetts, the endemic area for this disease. The child has since recovered.

For other information on EEE and WNV encephalitis see the MDPH Web site from a link on the MDPH homepage at http://www.state. ma.us/dph. or call the Cohasset Board of Health.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Ted LeClair kicks off state senate run

Ted LeClair formally launches his campaign for the Plymouth-Norfolk District of the Massachusetts State Senate on Thursday, June 6, at the Elks Lodge in Weymouth.

"It's an honor to be officially announcing my State Senate candidacy for the Plymouth-Norfolk district," said LeClair. "I am running for this seat because I know that we can do more. Now more than ever, our district needs a Senator who is committed to changing the way our state government conducts the people's business. I believe that we can do more for working families, more for our senior citizens, and more for our youth. I will spend the coming months meeting with voters across the district to discuss their issues and why I am running for this office."

LeClair, a Scituate naive and current Marshfield resident, is a Democratic candidate for the Plymouth-Norfolk District of the Massachusetts State Senate. LeClair, a graduate of Scituate Public Schools, received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Villanova University and is a graduate degree candidate in government at Harvard University School of Extension.

As a Lieutenant in the United States Navy, LeClair served on the USS Callaghan, a guided missile destroyer, in the Persian Gulf between 1993-1994 and was awarded the Navy Commendation Medal and the Navy Achievement Medal. Currently, Lieutenant LeClair serves on Battle Group Staff 2, which is the reserve component that serves aboard the aircraft carrier USS George Washington and supports the George Washington Battle Group command.

Following his national service, LeClair returned home, founded LeClair Brothers Cranberry Company in Norwell and also became part owner of Webster Cranberry, Inc. In addition, LeClair sat on the Board of Directors of the Cape Cod Cranberry Grower's Association. He recently took a leave of absence as a health-care executive to campaign around the district full-time.

It's official: Nathaniel Palmer to run for state rep

Nathaniel Palmer, a Cohasset businessman and active member of the South Shore community for many years, formally announces his candidacy for State Representative, Third Plymouth district, having exceeded all state filing requirements. The official kick-off began this morning with a successful rally at the Hingham Shipyard and includes a number of activities throughout the month of June, with a community-wide reception held the evening of June 29 at the Hingham Community Center.

"I was both humbled and inspired by the number of friends and community activists who approached me over the last few months and asked me to consider running for this seat," Palmer explains. "After much contemplation and a long conversation with my wife Heather, we visited with literally hundreds of constituents in Hingham, Hull, Cohasset and Scituate and asked their opinions on my candidacy."

"The response was completely positive and very encouraging," he says. "We spoke with Independents, Republicans, Democrats, and Libertarians. In every case the message was consistent and clear - 'Absolutely run, it's time for a change!' we heard that message over and over again."

The voters of the South Shore voiced their growing concern over the increasingly autocratic and out-of-control one-party system that has monopolized activities on Beacon Hill, a problem clearly illustrated by the recent budget fiasco. Palmer found in the voters of his district a wellspring of support for his fight to restore balance within the State House and strengthen representation for the South Shore.

"The one-party system on Beacon Hill has run without check for too long, and now we are all suffering the consequences," he says. "We need a state representative who can work with our governor to ensure that out-of-control spending is reigned in, that taxes are fair, equitable, and voter-approved. We need a Rep who ensures the concerns of the South Shore are no longer taken for granted."

Palmer pledges to work hard on the critical issues facing this district, including the need for strong, well-funded schools; the preservation of open spaces; above all that the South Shore has the ability to control our own destiny, to ensure that the quality of life which makes this area so attractive is not jeopardized by misplaced good intentions nor overzealous development.

Nathaniel Palmer waves to commuters. Palmer is joined by fellow Republicans, Martha Gjesteby, Peter Guild, Mary Anne McKenna, David Farrag, and Paul Alciere.

"Right now we have far too many reminders of what happens when bureaucracy goes unchecked, as has happened with the current one-party system. We all have the right to the quiet enjoyment of our home, yet today this right is threatened by Beacon Hill and Washington D.C. bureaucrats who believe they know better than we do what's best for our district," he says. "I pledge to restore our rights and representation on such critical issues to our quality of life as the expansion of transportation, local control over commercial development and education choices. "

Hopeful news on school building reimbursement

State Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, sponsored an amendment that restored more than $20 million to the School Building Assistance line item for the Department of Education to reimburse communities for the projects that came off the wait list in FY'03. Bradley had fought for level funding from last year at about $51 million but was unsuccessful. The House Ways and Means budget had zero funded this program until the amendment was passed.

The reduction in funding, over the objection Bradley and others, may force some districts to postpone school building projects or seek alternative ways to cover costs as they await state money. However, this amendment also included a safeguard for cities and towns across the Commonwealth, to protect them financially until the state is able to begin reimbursement.

Currently, a city or town may be approved for a short-term loan for a period of five years, pursuant to state law for a school building project. Municipalities initially pay for these projects with borrowed money in anticipation of state reimbursement. During that waiting period, the communities pay the interest on the loan. A problem may arise when the waiting period for reimbursement exceeds five years, the community must pay the interest and the principal on the loan, which could create a serious financial problem for the city or town. Consequently, local taxpayers could have to pay hefty payments on construction projects while the community waits for state money.

This amendment will change the current law to allow municipalities to borrow money for up to seven years.

Until now, school districts have been able to anticipate state money arriving within three to five years from the start of a project. However, with the state facing an estimated $3 billion deficit for Fiscal Year 2003, state education officials are predicting that the interval between commencement of the project and reimbursement may stretch to six or seven years.

This amendment will change the current law to allow municipalities to borrow money for up to seven years, therefore safeguarding them if the state does not begin reimbursing within five years.

"This legislation will ensure that cities and towns that are borrowing money for school construction projects are protected for an additional two years," Bradley said. "Therefore, if the state is unable to reimburse within five years, the municipalities will be not have to start paying the principal on the loan for another two years.

"Many communities in my district are planning school construction projects and this budget amendment will ensure that taxpayers in these communities are not left to pay for expensive school renovation and construction projects."

Bradley also co-sponsored another amendment relative to the School Building Assistance Program, which will ensure that projects on the priority list will not be re-ranked. This amendment was adopted and provides that the school building assistance board provides funding in the order of placement in the list.

The Senate will develop its own budget, debate it, amend it and pass their version. Bradley hopes his amendment will be included in the Senate budget and final FY'03 state budget.

Vietnam, Korea veterans memorials are planned

The Veterans Memorial Committee announced it has begun planning for a Korean and Vietnam Memorial. The memorial will be at Veterans Park, Cohasset Harbor. Veterans Park was dedicated in the mid-1960s at the height of the Vietnam War.

The committee added the first memorial wall in 1970 remembering the men who gave their lives in the wars of the 20th-century. Recently, memorial walls have been constructed listing all those from Cohasset who served during World War I, World War II, and panels have been prepared for the names of the 199 Cohasset men who served in the Civil War.

The committee plans to design the new memorial to enhance the beauty of the park on the harbor, said Chairman Glenn A. Pratt. The Korea-Vietnam Memorial will have the names of all those Cohasset men and women who served. Nearly 175 served during the Korean War—America's Forgotten War—all but one returned. The number who served in America's longest war, Vietnam, is expected to approach the 435 who served in World War II. Cohasset sacrificed eight of its young men during the Vietnam conflict—five in 1969 alone.

Work on assembling the names of all who served will be time consuming and require input from the community, according to Pratt. Records kept by the state appear to be very accurate for Korea; original documents are on file at the military records center in Boston. Records for the Vietnam years are incomplete at the state records center, Pratt said. The committee plans a number of efforts over the next few months to solicit information from the community to compile a complete list of those who served.

Conceptual design work is expected to be completed this year and a funding request will be present at the 2003 town meeting.

FALLON COMMUNITY HEALTH PLAN

Honoring the 'Greatest Generation'

The Community Relations Committee of the Cohasset PSO recently held the "Greatest Generation Celebration" at the Joseph Osgood School. The children of different grades sang patriotic songs, Blanche Thompson played the piano and several of the third-grade students took part as greeters. This was a wonderful day in which young children were joined by many senior citizens from here in town and the event was enjoyed by all. A special thanks goes out to all who attended and also, to Maggie's Corner for providing wonderful breakfast breads and Atlantic Bagel for providing the coffee.

The Red Cross has scheduled the next Cohasset Community Blood Drive for Wednesday, June 12. The Blood Drive will be at St. Anthony Parish Center at the corner of South Main St. and Summer St. from 1:30-7:30 p.m. As in the past, baby-sitting will be provided from 3-5 p.m. Ample parking is available.

Most people can give blood through the American Red Cross. Potential donors must be at least 17 years of age, in good health and weigh over 110 pounds. In most cases, donors may give if they are on medication, but should know the names of these medications.

To register and make an appointment for donating at a specific time or if you have any questions, please call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 383-1290. You can also call the Red Cross at 1-800-448-3543.

Yard sale benefit

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee is holding a giant yard sale to raise money for the Joseph F. Walsh 3rd Scholarship, which has been awarded annually since 1978 to a Cohasset High School graduating senior. The sale will be held on Saturday, June 15 at 85 Linden Drive.

The Town Committee is seeking items to sell and volunteers who want to have a good time and work for a worthy cause. Committee Chairman Agnes McCann is looking forward to a large turnout.

"We are very proud of our scholarship recipients," she said, "and we are optimistic that we can depend upon the generosity and support of our community to make this day a success. This is the perfect opportunity for guilt-free yard sale shopping and an ideal way to find a great Father's Day present."

All proceeds will go directly to the scholarship fund. To make arrangements to drop off your items, to schedule a pick-up or to volunteer for an hour or two of fun, please call McCann at 383-0222 or Susan Kent at 383-2490.

PSO a good partner with schools

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Even with the school year winding down, there is still a lot of activity for some involved with the district. The Parent School Organization, a parent led group that works with the schools in an effort to improve all facets of the institutions, is still working to help the schools.

The PSO is a relatively new organization, prior to 1981 there were "communication councils" that worked with school administrators to try to improve the children's education. However, parents realized they would be better able to accomplish their goals if they were unified.

This year marks the first time that the PSO is de-centralized, meaning all three schools have separate organizations, and is governed by an executive board.

Jane Pescatore, a member of the School Committee and former chairman of the PSO, said having separate groups for each school creates an opportunity for parents to more closely interact with the school their child is attending. "The more parent involvement the better the organization is," she said. "More communication equals less misunderstanding and if the parents see what's happening in the schools they can reinforce it with their children."

Pescatore added the PSO acts as a support group and does not have a political agenda like the Parent Teachers Association, a national group. She said there are too many requirements and restrictions in the PTA while the PSO allows parents more freedom to work with the teachers and in the classrooms.

"Cohasset is such a small school system that it is beneficial not to be affiliated with a national organization," she said. "Because the PSO is not involved with salary negotiations, we work with the teachers as teachers, not as employees."

Supt. Edward Malvey said he believes Cohasset has a model PSO which other districts should take note of and try to duplicate.

"It's an outstanding support group on all levels of the district," he said. "I think they are a very positive voice for education in the community."

Malvey added there has always been a good deal of stability in the PSO and it has always been focused on what's right for the students. Malvey meets with the members of the organization on a monthly basis.

"The parents are often the ones that are more in tune with the issues facing the schools," he said. "The PSO has done some wonderful things."

All three of the schools, the Deer Hill School, Joseph Osgood School and the Cohasset Middle-High School, all boast PSOs with different presidents. Once a month, there is a presidents' council in which all the boards meet to discuss what's happening in their particular schools.

"It's a way for everyone to remain informed of the what's going on at each level of the school district," Pescatore said.

The PSO acts as both a support and fundraising group for the schools. It is focused a lot on curriculum enrichment programs as well as the libraries in all of the schools.

On its Web site, for example, the Deer Hill PSO lists some of its accomplishments from the current year.

The PSO has managed to amass 45 books, 23 books on tape and 33 videos for the library and still has a list of well over 100 books on its wish list. It has also purchased a set of six swings, venetian glass for the sixth-grade mosaic project and has helped bring a variety of programs into the classrooms.

"The PSO is always looking to channel as much money as it can into buying books for the schools," Pescatore said.

Rick Flynn, chairman of the school committee, said his board and the PSO have always had a good relationship. He said while the parent organization is not required to report to the committee, they often bring issues in front the board.

"We compliment each other very well," he said. "We've always had a good relationship."

Flynn said the PSO has a lot of value to the school system. He added its ability to raise funds and introduce parents to the district is something the School Committee greatly appreciates.

"It really gives a lot of people an opportunity to become involved with the schools who may not otherwise do so," he said.

Let's imagine making the first cruise on a mackerel schooner in 1836

Text by E. Victor Bigelow and Recounted by Isaiah Lincoln Compiled by L.F. Eaton

About the only part of the "Narrative History of Cohasset" (1898) that is a section described by someone other than the author E. Victor Bigelow, is an account of a fishing voyage164 years ago in 1836, as recounted by Mr. Isaiah Lincoln. It is so detailed and so different from our lives that I couldn't resist sharing it as a follow-up to last week's vignette about the mackerel fishing industry.

We will imagine ourselves in the year 1836 as described by Isaiah Lincoln, making a first cruise on a mackerel schooner.

On some spring day at the close of April, we get permission of Abraham Hobart Tower or of James Cutler Doane or John Bates or of some other vessel owner to join the crew of 10 fishermen in one of their schooners. That means a chance to fish from the deck of the schooner alongside of the others, upon the understanding that we are to get our share of the profits according to the number of fish that each of us may catch.

The share of the profit going to the owner of the schooner is to be about one-third. The first days' work is to heave aboard ballast and butts and salt. Twenty or 30 hogsheads or butts are rolled into the hold and placed at convenient positions under the hatches. These are to hold the fish we catch.

Into the spaces between these butts, we next throw about 20 tons of ballast, consisting of field stones that the old glacier left in our drumlins, and which "Uncle Job Cushing" or some other farmer hauls down to the wharf at one dollar per ton. These stones hold down the keel and keep the hogsheads in place, besides leaving room in the fields for better farming.

Salt is next put in, perhaps 20 hogsheads of it. The salt room in a pinky was aft against the cabin, while in a "square stern" it was abreast the "coal hole," which hole had two bunks and a locker for clothes. Some of the salt used was made upon our own beaches, as we shall see, but it had to be supplemented by Liverpool salt bought in Boston.

With aching backs, and hands well-roughed by our stevedoring, we crowd into the owner's store to get a new tarpaulin hat and leather boots, charged to our accounts as prospective partners in the fishing cruise. The men who have families get in addition to hat and boots, a long strip of salt pork weighing 10 or 15 pounds, with which to feed their families while the men are off at sea. As we make our way homeward, the neighbors are sure to see the big yellow tarpaulin upon our heads and to talk about our fishing venture.

Thus the vessel, having been fitted out, the next day the men get their outfit. A little firkin of tea, a box of "hard bread," two gallons of vinegar, a keg of rum holding three or four gallons, and three or four bushels of potatoes at 35 cents per bushel, are dealt out and put aboard for the crew to own in common. These items are charged as "small general" account to be paid by the crew while the ballast and hogsheads and salt, etc. were "great general" charges to be paid for by owners and crew together.

Besides these items, there are private supplies according to the taste and poverty of each man. Two pounds of butter in a box, three to five pounds of pork, one gallon of molasses (no sugar), perhaps three or four pounds of rice, seven to 14 pounds of Ohio flour (not very white, but costing $7 or $8 a barrel), a little box of corn meal (three or four pounds), and possibly some raisins,—these constitute the commissary outfit for a trip. The total bill for the whole summer in the case of an economical lad will be only about $14. Some men are so mean as to steal from another's pittance, so that each keeps guard of his own. Besides food, each must buy two dozen hooks of various sizes and a half-dozen skeins of fish line.

With aching backs, and hands well-roughed by our stevedoring, we crowd into the owner's store to get a new tarpaulin hat and leather boots...

At about the first of May, having attended to the affairs at home and having outfitted for a two or three months' cruise, we all get aboard the schooner at about the full tide and hoist the sails; off we float past Bassing Beach and White Head and through the ledges. Minot's Lighthouse is not yet built, not even the old iron one; but our skipper knows every rock as well as a person knows his own fingers by feeling.

Cape May, N.J.

This is the first fare of the summer and we are bound for a more southerly coast; say, off Cape May, N.J. If the wind is a raw one from the east, we shall beat out slowly past Provincetown, but from there down on the outside of the Cape we can make a good run to the fishing ground in three days. During that time, we are busy getting the bait and the jigs ready for fish. We have jig molds for running a little melted lead about the shaft of each hook, so that hood and sinker are one. Each jig is tied to the end of a line and sometimes another hood is fastened a few inches above the jig.

Bait boxes holding two buckets each are made with a fixture to hang them upon the outside of the schooner's rail, three on one side. The bait consists of three or four barrels of pogies, menhaden (something like herring), and the same amount of clams. The fish for bait are ground up in a mill somewhat like a huge coffee mill standing upon the deck. A half-bushel may be ground in five or 10 minutes, and a few clams are mixed into them. This makes good provender for mackerel, and is put into the bait boxes to be strewn upon the water where schools of the fish may be enticed.

Having arrived off Cape May, according to the captain's reckoning or his guess, the vessel sets herself to fish from the broadside. The captain shouts: "Hook on the main boom tackle on the port side!" "Haul down the jib!" "Ease off the main sheet!" "Haul the tackle forward!" "Haul taut and make fast!" "Let off the fore sheet!"

Then the captain — we ought to say "skipper" — goes to the bait box in the middle of the windward side of the schooner and throws a paddleful of ground bait into the water towards the bow, and another paddleful towards the stern, scattering it as broadly as possible. Then he watches with his mackerel line baited in the water. After drifting 30 or 50 feet, he throws more bait, feeling again at his line to get the first bite.

Meanwhile the crew are idling in any way they choose, until suddenly they hear a "bang" into the bottom of a tub, and then the quick flipping of a shiny mackerel which the skipper has "landed." This is the signal for all hands to get their fish lines into the water. They fix little bits of tough pork rind upon the barbed hooks and cast out two lines apiece, 30 feet long off the side of the schooner. They are all fishing from one side, the skipper in the best place, just abaft the mainmast, and all 10 arranged upon either side of him.

The hooks hang about four or six feet under water, and if the school of mackerel is a vigorous one, they bite as soon as the baited hood strikes the water. The bite is a strong grab and then a shoot to one side; but you pull the shiny victim hand-over-hand to the side of the vessel, and reaching down your right hand, you catch the line over the rail. One sharp slat and he is thrown into your fish tub or barrel by a jerk that tears the hood out of his jaw and hurls the hook out again with its tough bait into the water for its next victim.

Meantime perhaps your other line has caught a fish, and you must pull him in at once or he will swim across the other lines and bring some indelicate remarks upon you from your fishermates. If the fishing is good, every man is pulling first one of his lines and then the other as fast as his hands can fly.

When 10 fishermen are all thus busy snapping up the fish over the sides of the vessel, it is a spectacle never to be forgotten. A constant stream of mackerel, with their silver sides gleaming like so many snowflakes, fall over the ship's rail into the fish tubs of dying companions. Such biting lasts for two hours sometimes, when perhaps a shark comes along, tearing hooks and lines which have caught in his skin, and terrorizing the school of mackerel so that not one is left near the vessel.

30 barrels-full

Perhaps we have caught 30 "wash" barrels-full, some of the fish measuring 15 inches in length. These have to be dressed while the vessel is sailing back again to her fishing ground, for she has drifted broadside about three miles an hour. The skipper orders his men: "Haul aft the fore sheet!" "Hoist the jib!" "Slack the boom tackle!" "Haul aft the main sheet!" "Right the helm!" "Unhook the boom tackle!"

The vessel gets underway and then is brought around upon another tack towards the place where the fish began to bite. The skipper gets the schooner well balanced on her course, gauging the helm lashed while he joins the crew in dressing up their 30 barrels of fish.

Two men work at each barrel, the splitter and the gibber. The splitter has a board across the top of his barrel, and reaching down into the barrel with his left hand, he places a fish upon the board. With one stroke of the knife the back of the fish is laid open from nose to tail along one side of the backbone and the fish is pushed off into the gibber's tub. This gibber, with a deft movement of thumb and fingers, tears out the entrails and gills; then he throws the fish into another barrel having two pailfuls of water to soak out the blood preparatory to the salting-down process.

When the vessel is back again, the fish are not found very plentiful; but the skipper throws out bait now and then or the men throw it out, while a few fish are hauled in at intervals. When it gets dusk, no more fishing for that day is possible. The sails are furled and the boom is crotched and a lantern is hung in the main peak halyards; thus she floats for the night. All hands go down into the cabin to drink a cup of strong cold tea and to munch some hard bread or to eat the hard bread crumbed into water sweetened with molasses. No cooking is done to-night, for the fishing has been so good that no one would "knock off" to build a fire. In a few minutes all are on deck again to finish dressing their fish.

Then comes the salting. Each splitter takes a candle and an old two-tined fork down into the hold. He makes a candlestick of the fork by jabbing it into the inside of the hogshead halfway up the staves, holding the candle between the tines of the fork. This gives light upon the fish as they are packed into the bottom of the hogshead. Getting his salt tub ready, the splitter shouts to his gibber above at the hatch, "Fish ho!" The gibber empties a wash barrel of split fish upon the deck beside the hatch, and begins to drop the fish, two at a time, lying skin against flesh, into a tub of salt in the hold. The splitter, now become salter, takes one fish in each hand, rubbing them flesh-downward into the salt; and then placing them together again as they were, skin against flesh, he packs them into the bottom of the big hogshead in the light of the candle, skin-up in plenty of salt.

After salting down, the decks are washed, the oil trousers are taken off, and faces and hands are bathed in salt water. The scratched hands sting with the salt, but fresh water is too scarce for such use.

The watch is set and the rest of the crew go below to sleep. The two boys of the crew take the first watch, one at the bow, the other at the stern. It is about 11 o'clock and all are tired out. The five hours until four o'clock in the morning are divided into eight watches, so that no one has to keep awake very long.

The second hand or mate takes the morning watch and at four o'clock, just as the first gray streak of day is breaking the night off from the eastern rim of the ocean, he steps to the companion way and stamps upon the deck three times saying, "All hands ahoy! Up mainsail!"

The crew turns out, all stiff and the chilly air strikes to the bones and marrow. Now, if ever, a good warm breakfast would be welcome; but think what an apology we must have. There is no stove, only an old-fashioned fireplace in the little cabin. If the fire is lost it must be made in the clumsy tinder-box fashion, for friction matches were not introduced here till 1838.

The tinder is some black burnt linen kept dry in a horn. A piece of flint is struck with an old steel file until a spark falls into the tinder. This spark lights the tinder and burns until a sliver of wood with a sulphur tip is ignited by it, when the tinder spark is crushed out and the burning sulphur match lights a fire of charcoal in the fireplace.

Every one has to cook for himself, and the one who makes the fire is rewarded by having the first chance to cook his breakfast. If there are any fish biting, the crew attends first to the business of catching them.

Pot of tea

A pot of tea for all hangs over the fire. The first cook stirs some flour into molasses with a pinch of saleratus and salt, and this batter is cooked in a frying pan greased with a bit of salt pork. The name of this fried batter is "flapjacks" or "flippers," and they constitute the fisherman's luxury. In about five minutes these are cooked, and the man above hear the welcome shout from the cabin, "Clear fire!" Then the skipper comes with a handful of spawns saved from the mackerel, and fries them while the fire building is eating his two flippers with his mug of tea. Each has his own yellow earthenware mug, his knife, spoon and fork.

When the skipper has cooked his spawn he shouts, "Clear fire!" Perhaps two fishermen jump at once for the gangway, one with potatoes and the other with mackerel. The man who first places his uncooked food upon a chest at the foot of the stairs and shouts, "chested" has his turn at the fire. These two struggle to get down first, but the potatoes and mackerel are badly mashed or even hurled upon the floor, and the men themselves, perhaps are bruised a good deal, before one may shout, "chested!" The same frying pan does for all. The same rough fare is endured by all. The fishing business is no soft sinecure; it is rough and tough, and the men are earning what they get.

After several weeks of good and bad luck, the vessel works along towards the north and east to the neighborhood of Block Island towards home. If the catch has amounted to 150 or 200 barrels of fish and the biting seems poor, and a good strong southwest wind springs up urging the vessel homeward, the skipper orders the men to stop the fishing. "Hoist the jib!" "Set the colors!" "Give her the whole of the mainsheet, boys!" "Away with her about northeast and we'll see how nigh we can hit Gay Head!"

We are off for home, where families and friends await us and where the owners of the vessel are anxious to know whether we have brought back enough fish to pay for their investment. A couple of days' sailing gets us into Massachusetts Bay, and perhaps we come creeping back into old Cohasset Harbor before daylight some June morning. With the return of the fishing vessels from this first trip, there is bound up the good fortune of many Cohasset small boys.

Fishermen's luck kept having its ups and downs, but during the six years beginning with 1820, the total catch of Cohasset steadily gained until in 1825, the whole annual amount was $17,520 barrels. These fish, at the moderate price of $5 a barrel for all grades, brought nearly $90,000.

One can easily see that our population of about 1,200 must have been very much concerned in the fish business, and must have felt very widely the profit of a successful year. At least 300 out of the 1,200 were actual fishermen, while a score of boys in addition were employed to pack the fish, and many more laborers in cooper shops and salt works and shipyards were attached to the business indirectly. The homes of Beechwood, in particular, furnished a very large force of fishermen; and so completely was that community bereft of men and boys during the fishing season that not a dozen able-bodied men could be gathered by an emergency like a house on fire."

The third volume of the Cohasset Town History is scheduled to become available in June of this year and the Committee responsible for publication has thought to publish a few articles, courtesy of the Cohasset Mariner, about local history to stimulate interest in matters historical even though not related to the period of 1950 to 2000 covered by Volume III.

Cohasset history available soon

Available in less than a month, the Narrative History of Cohasset Volume III brings Cohasset's local history from 1950 up to the year 2000. Read how your friends, neighbors and acquaintances have made Cohasset the town it is today. The volume is 432 pages long including a 20-page color insert and four map pages. There are a total of 244 photographs, more than 50 in full color. The book is well sourced and indexed for easy researching. Any questions, you may call Wigmore Pierson at 781-383-6940.

You can reserve a copy by sending a check for $32 plus $3.50 for postage payable to the Town of Cohasset and mail to Committee on Town History, Town Hall, 41 Highland Avenue, Cohasset, MA 02025.

Be careful what you wish for

Cohasset laxmen clip Norwell to advance to quarterfinals showdown with Hingham

"Be Careful What You Wish For" read the prominent headline on the front page of the Norwell Mariner sports section last week.

The fifth-ranked Clippers had said their season's goal was to beat Cohasset, and that they were happy to get a second chance when the luck of the draw found the two Pilgrim rivals facing each other in the round of 16 in the Division 2 state tournament.

The Mariner seemed prescient, as Cohasset stormed back from a 3-1 first quarter deficit, and knocked off Norwell 11-8 to advance to the quarterfinals.

The Skippers were led by junior attackman Curt Kahn's five goals, including four in a row over a 12:36 span between the end of the second period and the start of the fourth.

"Curt Kahn was the difference in this game, as far as I'm concerned," noted Norwell coach Frank Granara. "He was a lefty shot, and we hadn't seen too many of those this season, and none that we saw compared to him. He was hitting shots from all kinds of tough angles. He had a great, quick shot that was just incredibly accurate, and we didn't have an answer for it."

During the aforementioned four goal span, Kahn twice answered Norwell scores that brought the Clippers even, and gave the Skippers the final lead that they never relinquished.

"Curt led a junior class that played their best game of the season," said Cohasset coach Kevin Orcutt. "Matt Davis with three goals, Tom Anderson, John Durkin, Nick Spirito and Robert Hickey all showed the future is now."

Cohasset was handicapped by the fact that both the prom and SATs had been held in the previous 24 hours. Nevertheless, the Skippers showed the best sustained intensity of the season. Leading 7-6 entering the fourth quarter, Cohasset raised the level of its play. With senior goalie Kyle

Cohasset star Weber picks education ahead of lacrosse

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Needless to say, all of the members of the Cohasset boys lacrosse team have some powerful motivation to keep this post-season run going as long as possible, the seniors in particular…obviously.

Arguably none, however, have any greater motivation to stretch this out than Kyle Weber, a player who is clearly capable of playing lacrosse at the college level but has opted not to.

Kyle, Cohasset's two time Pilgrim Conference all-star goalie, appeared all set to play Div. 2 lacrosse at Colorado College next year. The coaches from that school actively recruited him, and all signs were this winter that this is where he would be headed. However, he changed field earlier this spring and decided to attend Northwestern University, which has no lacrosse program.

"It was the best decision for me," was all Weber would say of the decision that had several area lacrosse coaches shaking their heads. "I'm going to school to get an education, and lacrosse can become all consuming. I want to concentrate on grades first."

Cohasset coach Kevin Orcutt was one of those shaking his head somewhat . He'd been told by college coaches that Kyle had a legitimate shot of playing Div. I lacrosse, and figured originally that Colorado College might well serve as a launching pad to a bigger opportunity. The last thing the Cohasset coach would ever do, however, is question his young goaltender's priorities.

"Kyle is a smart kid and you know he's thinking first about his education," said the second year Cohasset coach who played college hockey and lacrosse at Merrimack College. "He probably wants to make sure he settles in OK at college."

Orcutt does surmise, though,

Semi-sweet loss for girls tennis

'Learning' tourney run ends with 3-2 heartbreaker to Westwood

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

This year's run to the semifinals for the Cohasset High girls tennis team was a great learning experience. All challengers should be forewarned that the Lady Skippers—who return six of seven starting team members – will start cashing in on that experience next spring.

This year's "earning" run for the Cohasset girls finally ended on Tuesday with a heartbreaking 3-2 loss to top seeded Westwood (18-0), a perennial powerhouse in girls tennis.

The fourth match ended Tuesday to tie the team match score at 2-2, placing all of the pressure squarely on the last two Cohasset players standing, senior Kelly Stone and junior Courtney Caron, who were already down a set (3-6).

Knowing the entire season was on the line, the Cohasset veterans picked it up a notch against the formidable Westwood duo of Molly Hock and Kate Gold to take a 6-5 lead in set two. However, Hoc and

No shame in defeat

Cohasset lady laxers' 'historic' season comes to a close

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

OK, so the Cohasset girls lacrosse team saw its season come to a close with a 21-9 defeat at the hands of powerhouse Westwood in the second round of the state tourney on Monday…barely puts a dent in what was a great season, as far as first year head coach Torin Sweeney is concerned.

"I couldn't be any happier about what these girls accomplished this year," said the rookie lax coach but longtime wrestling and football mentor. "I really enjoyed the whole experience, and the girls should feel really good about themselves.

"We should talk about the whole week, not just the loss to Westwood."

Alrighty.

Many of the more noteworthy achievements in the Cohasset High lady laxers 2002 campaign were notched this past week, beginning with last Thursday's impressive 9-4 win over Bourne that qualified the Skippers for the state tourney with a 9-9 record.

The Skippers edged the Canalwomen a week earlier south of the Bourne Bridge, 11-8, charging back from an early 6-1 deficit to pull out the first of two "must wins."

"Every game we played down the stretch felt like a playoff game, and we knew the second one with Bourne was going to be a real pressure cooker, but our girls really came through," said Sweeney, who agreed to take over the head coaching reigns this spring on an interim basis for Kathy Gadiano (maternity leave).

Junior Sera Genovese paced the Skippers attack in the regular season finale with four goals and an assist, while senior captain Kristin Sheerin added two goals and two helpers. Junior goalie Gia Petrakis also came up huge between the pipes, making 12 saves, including a handful of the

Cohasset's Baird, Maitland, 4x100 team fail to qualify for New Englands

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Advancing three athletes plus a relay team to this past weekend's All-State meet at Worcester State College has to be considered quite an accomplishment for a school the size of Cohasset High, and sending even one on from there to the New England Track and Field championships would have made the spring. Unfortunately, it was not to be.

Last spring, Pete Maitland became the first Cohasset High trackster in five years to qualify for New Englands when he finished fifth in the javelin with a throw of 178-feet-6-inches at All-States. Maitland could not duplicate that effort as a senior, as he topped out at 163-feet-4 inches this past Saturday on the soggy Worcester State field, which was good for 13th place.

Fellow senior Tim Baird was also well off the necessary top six pace in the 800-meter run, finishing 15th with time of 2:02:22. The 4x100 meter team of seniors Jason Brown and Steve Laney and juniors Ian Kidder and Jared Krupczak likewise finished 15th with a run of 45:17.

Youth lacrosse goes 10-0-1 for the week

Back from the long holiday layoff and preparing for the massive, season-ending Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse Jamboree, the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse teams shook off its rust to win 10 of the 11 games it played on the week.

Even the tie, which came in girls action, felt like something of a victory, given a big comeback that was completed in the final seconds.

The youngest boys teams started the weekend's action with Friday night games that were played in a race against the weather. The Cohasset Blue squads stayed home, while the unbeaten White teams went to Scituate.

The one game that was completed before the rains came was the 12-U White team's convincing team victory over Scituate. Cohasset controlled the tempo from the outset, jumping out to a 3-0 first-quarter lead on the strength of goals from Charlie Czerkawski, John Sturino and Pat Doonan. All three goals were assisted, with Peter Oswald, Owen Landon and Mark Flibotte recording helpers.

Goaltender Wes Ulmer had the answer to seemingly every Scituate counter-attack. Czerkawski scored on an assist from T.J. Kennedy and then returned the favor to Kennedy before Flibotte closed out the first-half's scoring to put Cohasset in control, 6-1.

Danny Brady set up Peter Oswald as the two teams traded single scores in the third period, before Cohasset put on a fourth-quarter clinic about team offense and defense. Kennedy netted two goals on feeds from Oswald and Landon, and Flibotte assisted Pete Ernst and Ramsey Davis to close out the scoring and give Cohasset the 11-2 final edge.

Cohasset's 10-U White team (grades 3 and 4) next took the field in Scituate. Brendan Doonan gave Cohasset a 1-0 lead and Chris Walsh answered a Scituate score to make it 2-1 after the first quarter.

The second quarter saw good play by Enrico Teruzzi, Patrick Cantillon and Geoff Evans to keep pressure on the Scituate goalie, before Oliver Forrer broke through on a nice feed from Eamon Davis. Andrew McKenna made it 4-1 on a nice three-dodge play, and Jack Murphy made it stand up in the net, stopping six Scituate shots and curtailing a Scituate run that closed the game to 4-3 at the half. At that point, however, the weather stepped in, shutting down the scorers and ending the contest in a Cohasset victory.

At Milliken Field Friday night, it was the Cohasset Blue 12-U program (grades 5 and 6) squaring off against Marshfield, and spending most of their time trying to remember what NOT to do. The result was a penalty-filled first half that had players, coaches and fans shaking their heads in disbelief as the home team seemed to be man-down for most of the short-lived game.

Fortunately, there were a few bright spots on the field, as Sam DeGiacomo hustled courageously throughout and managed to come up with just about every ground ball he came near. The attack group of Alex Shipp, Conor Murphy and Chris Rose also showed that they remembered how to play the game, with excellent ball movement on offense. Mike Grimm's hat trick was enough to secure the win, with Justin Hollis and the defense making it stand up. Logan Chase added one goal and Teddy Galligan and Matt Burgess each had an assist to Grimm.

The undisputed winner, however, was Mother Nature, who stepped in to end the game just 5:35 into the third quarter, giving Cohasset a rain-soaked, lightning-shortened 4-1 victory.

The Cohasset Blue 10-U squad (grades 3 and 4) played what amounted to a modified scrimmage against a young Weymouth team that arrived with no goaltender. In a great gesture of sportsmanship, the two sides agreed to turn the goals upside-down and play without netminders.

Despite this, the score was not outlandish. Max Shipp opened the scoring unassisted, followed by a Jake Wheelwright-to-Conor Queenan hook-up. From there, it was Will Wise by himself, and Dean Driscoll converting a feed from Shipp as Cohasset raced to a 4-1 lead after one period. Driscoll finished a pass from Wise, who then scored his second of the game of a feed from Andrew Whitney (Whitney's first point of the season) to give the local squad a 6-2 halftime lead. In the rain-shortened third-quarter, Justin Yeager finished an Austin Meyers pass before Driscoll completed both his hat trick and the day's scoring, giving Cohasset an 8-3 final edge.

The weather was much more cooperative Sunday, when most of Cohasset's boys squads were home against teams from Martha's Vineyard.

The action started with the 12-U Blue squad, which was inspired by a rousing Saturday practice that reminded the team what Cohasset lacrosse is all about and which came out firing on all cylinders and put on a dazzling performance, dominating the Vineyard Silver team in all aspects of the game.

Mike Grimm started where he had left off Friday and quickly netted two scores, first finishing a Jake Cuneo feed on a fast break and then a no-look pass from Sam DeGiacomo. Alex Shipp then lit up the cage on a give-and-go from Chris Rose, and Nathan Porter proved that the man-ball drills were not wasted as he scooped and shot for another score from in front of the goal as the 1st period came to an end with Cohasset in front 4-0.

Justin Connors opened the second quarter with a fine unassisted score before Grimm completed his second hat trick of the weekend off a feed from Shipp. Grimm returned the favor and fed Shipp less than two minutes later.

DeGiacomo next converted a laser-like feed from Chris Rose, who followed with a goal of his own set up by a great stick fake-and-feed from Grimm.

The first half ended with Cohasset in command 9-0, thanks in large part to the phenomenal goaltending of Wes Ulmer (14 saves on the day) and the solid play of Mike Bilodeau and Justin Hollis, who led an overpowering defensive effort.

Derek St. Peter made a solid impact at both the midfield and defensive ends of the field, while David Crawford, Eric MacCarthy, and Charlie Mushin continued in their fine supporting roles to keep the offensive juggernaut moving forward.

With the game well in hand, the second half gave all the players the opportunity to play some new positions which evened up the contest and kept it competitively challenging for all. The defense continued its fine play, but Martha's Vineyard put two goals on the board through some fine ball movement of its own. Cohasset answered again with a goal from Teddy Galligan finishing a feed from Grimm, who had moved to defense. As the game moved into the fourth quarter, the play was back and forth as both teams showed some heat fatigue. Grimm put a nice cap on an outstanding day of play by adding two more goals both on fast breaks from the midfield and defensive zones to close out the game with a 12-2 final.

Next, it was the 12-U White team against a Vineyard Black squad that presented White with its toughest competition of the year. The teams traded goals through the first quarter, with Mark Flibotte scoring twice and Andrew Bell finishing off a Charlie Czerkawski feed as the period ended knotted at 3. Outstanding goaltending on both sides kept the game close up to the half. Czerkawski and Flibotte scored unassisted goals, with Peter Ernst finishing a Peter Oswald pass as Cohasset went into halftime with a 6-5 lead.

The boys came out for the third frame ready for action and dominated play. Czerkawski ripped his second, third and fourth goals of the game, with Pat Doonan and Mark Flibotte adding assists, as Cohasset's lead stretched to 9-6 heading into the final break. The fourth quarter saw the hometown team show how to play with and hold onto a lead, using solid team defense and ball control. Czerkawski's fifth on the day, assisted by Bell, created a four-goal edge. The Vineyard team added two goals in the last minute of play, but Cohasset got the final possession and ran out the clock with a 10-8 edge on the scoreboard.

In action at the 14-U level, Cohasset's unbeaten team fell behind Martha's Vineyard early before coming back strong. Aidan Buick led the charge with five goals and an assist. Michael Pecca added two goals, with Corey Chase, Trevor Brady and Parker Berg scoring one each. The goal for Berg was his first on the season.

Jared Kinch and Mike Bunstein contributed three assists each, with Chase and Buick each adding one helper of their own. Eric Libby made 10 saves in the nets, backstopping a solid defense of Jeff Brown, Bobby Meikleham, Robert Silvia, Dan MacCarthy, Colin Smith and Hunter Sease. MacCarthy, in particular, played his best defensive game of the season, and he and Dan Trendowicz made some body checks that were so big the noise was probably audible in Edgartown.

Sunday's final home games at Milliken featured two unbeaten teams, as the 10-U White squad hosted Plymouth for what proved to be a hard-hitting game. Cohasset kept its cool and out-hustled a physical — and oft-penalized — Plymouth team.

Brendan Doonan again started the scoring, followed by a John Kearney goal for a 2-0 lead. With Cohasset ahead 2-1 and 10 seconds left in the half, Kearney took the ball out behind the net and made a nifty move and shot to make it 3-1 with three seconds left to spare.

Luke Ernst started the second half with a strong shot to make it 4-1,and Brendan Horrigan answered a Plymouth score by burying a goal as he was falling down. Cohasset led 5-3 at the start of the final quarter, with tough defense by Andrew Cantillon, Sean MacCarthy, Kevin O'Connell, Thomas Pecca and Taylor McQuade keeping Plymouth at bay. Goalies Jack Murphy and Ian Quinlan both had fantastic saves and played their best games of the year.

The very physical fourth quarter was started by Phil Galligan's goal and a multi-dodge play by Murphy, who moved to the midfield, to give Cohasset a well-deserved, solid 7-3 win. The whole team jumped on goalie Ian Quinlan to celebrate the team's victory at the end of the game.

Playing in just their second home games of the season, Cohasset's girls programs faced Hingham's Red teams at the Deer Hill School and again played close, tough games against their closest rivals.

At the 12-U level, Cohasset fell behind quickly, but then took control of the game with two goals from Gabriella Flibotte, the second coming on a direct-free position. Paige Strecker then scored from her knees, before Isabelle Franklin picked up her first point of the season with an assist to Flibotte. After another Hingham goal, Flibotte quickly retaliated and the game was 5-2 in favor of Cohasset. From there, the teams traded goals to the half, with Betsy Crawford scoring his first goal of the year for Cohasset on a strong individual effort, and Maura Barnes converting a loose ball.

Cohasset quickly took control in the second half, with Alexandra Graven twice charging from behind the net to convert scoring opportunities. Amy Meikleham netted a floater and Flibotte scored her fifth of the day.

Despite the 11-7 final score, the game was closer than it appeared, with Thomson Jaffe recording 16 saves in the nets for Cohasset and consistently thwarting Hingham's best scoring chances. Rebecca Evans and McKenna Teague led a defensive effort that turned Hingham misses into Cohasset opportunities.

At the 14-U level, Cohasset controlled the ball early, but it was Hingham that took the lead, jumping out 2-0 before Kaleigh Swain drove from behind the goal to break the ice for Cohasset. Hingham scored the next three goals, and it appeared the rout was on, but Michelle Madge netted a direct-free position, Lisa Spirito scored on a well-placed bounce shot and Caren Garber converted a hard-driving run from the side of the net to make it a 5-4 game at the half.

Hingham scored two quick goals to make it 7-4 and the second half was nearly gone when Mary Previte drove the Hingham net, drew a foul and was able to convert a direct-free position for her first goal of the season.

Spirito followed with her second goal of the game, and Aisling Guinee came up with four big saves down the stretch, allowing Cohasset to make one final run. Lisa Spirito netted the tying goal with 40 seconds left, and the two teams finished knotted at 7.

Jamie Genovese, Haley Haracz — who normally plays midfield – and Rebecca Evans, who moved up from the 12-U team to bolster a shorthanded defense, played a great game in front of Guinee, who finished with 6 saves.

The Blue 12-U team and the girls teams have games in Quincy this week, with all seven teams headed to Fort Devens for the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League Jamboree on June 9.

Pete and Pete on national lacrosse stage

Cohasset's Peter Ernst (left) and Peter Oswald (right) have been selected to the New England Lacrosse All Star Team that will compete at the annual U.S. Lacrosse National Youth Festival later this month.

Congratulations to Peter Ernst and Peter Oswald for being selected to the New England Lacrosse All Star Team and for representing our town at the U.S. Lacrosse National Youth Festival.

Every year, the U.S. Lacrosse organization sponsors a three-day youth competition to showcase the best and brightest players from around the country and once again, Cohasset Youth Lacrosse will be well represented by these two outstanding athletes and individuals.

To earn this honor, the "two Petes" had to go through multiple try-outs and were part of a group of only seven players from Cohasset's youth programs that made the South Regional All Star Team. From there, they went on to the final competition that was held at Dean College where the best youth players from around the state came together to compete in a full day of spirited round-robin contests.

With more than 200 players competing for the final team rosters, the depth and character of youth lacrosse in Massachusetts was at its finest and Cohasset was well represented in this select mix. As standouts on both their Youth and Thayer Academy Lacrosse Teams, "Pete and Pete" have consistently provided team leadership and an individual commitment to the game that was clearly on display as the coaches made their final selections. The entire Cohasset lacrosse community wishes them the best of luck in this exciting new chapter in their athletic endeavors.

The festival will be held at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst the weekend of June 28-30 and will be attended by youth all-star teams from around the country that will represent the very best of youth lacrosse in the United States.

that once this happens Kyle may well be bit by the lacrosse bug again.

"I've seen it happen to a few kids over the years," Orcutt noted. "A season goes by and they realize how much they miss it. I'm sure Kyle will do what's best for him, though."

Weber intends to major in either Psychology or Sociology at Northwestern, a Big 10 School just outside Chicago, and, for starters, play club lacrosse.

"I can't give up lacrosse cold turkey," said the slightly built netminder who makes up for his lake of size with catlike quickness and startling intuition. "There is some pretty competitive club play out there from what I've been told, so I'll still keep hand in."

What seems odd about the decision is that Weber sacrificed so much for the sport. Once a standout on the basketball court for C.H.S. as well as a very good soccer player, Weber decided after his sophomore year to concentrate his athletic energies solely on lacrosse. He played in indoor leagues in the winter and fall, and attended several prominent camps in the summer. He also backstopped the gold medal effort for the Southeast team at the annual Bay State Games this summer.

"I've had a ball playing high school lacrosse, and I want it to last as long as possible," he said. "It's going to seem weird not being together with this group of guys next spring."

And that won't be the only shock to the system. Going from a high school that is home to just over 300 students, grades 9-12, to one that is home to nearly 16,000, never mind going from a sleepy little town like Cohasset to the outskirts of Chicago, will probably be replete with more than a few eye opening experiences.

"Yeah, there'll probably be a period of adjustment," he concedes with a chuckle. "But there were a lot of things pointing this way for me. I see going to Northwestern as a great opportunity for me."

Weber posted an outstanding 72 percent save ratio as a junior last season to earn first team all-star honors in the powerhouse Pilgrim Conference, leading the Skippers to the state Div. 2 championship game against Hingham. He followed that up with a solid senior campaign that saw him stop 65.4 percent of the shots on net, while playing in front of several first year defenders.

"Cohasset has had a tradition over the past 14 years of developing outstanding, technically-sound goalies capable of playing at the next level, and Kyle has certainly upheld that tradition," lauded team assistant coach Terry Kahn. "His body positioning is superb, and his passing skills as good as any I've seen in Massachusetts high school ball. He's a vocal, positive leader, a great guy, and lifts his game for the best opponents."

At the time of this writing, Weber and the Skippers were slated to get another shot at Hingham yesterday in the Div. 2 quarterfinals. Weber came up with 20 big saves in the second round win over Pilgrim Conference rival Norwell on Saturday, 11-8.

Laxmen clip Norwell to advance

Weber (18 saves) stopping the outside shots of Norwell's midfield-oriented attack, and defensemen Spirito, senior Chris Caron, soph Steven Davis and senior longstick middie Dave Devito shutting down the inside feeds and dodges, Cohasset extended its lead to 11-7.

Key to the run were goals by senior co-captains Eric Libby and Paul Previte, whose scores in the final three-and-a-half minutes put the game out of reach.

"For our seniors to have been up all night at the prom, and then come out this evening with this kind of effort is testament to their love of and commitment to the game of lacrosse," said coach Orcutt. "Norwell is a fine team, which has grown over the course of the season, and was prepared to put everything on the line to win this game. We just wouldn't let them."

Kahn's five goals give him 51 on the season, along with 31 assists. Davis now has 23 goals and 50 points. Other Cohasset scorers were Paul Previte (with an assist), Eric Libby (and an assist), and John Durkin (also an assist). Tom Anderson and Robert Hickey each had assists.

The Skippers expected to play the quarterfinal game on Wednesday, June 5, against either Hingham or Sandwich, both Pilgrim rivals who hold regular-season wins over Cohasset.

The host Clippers were kept in the game by the Grier brothers. Junior Jason, a second team Pilgrim Conference all-star, scored three first half goals. Senior brother Adam, Norwell's lone P.C. first teamer, matched that output in the second half to keep his team in the game.

Norwell senior Pete Donovan started the back and forth first half with a tally just 57 seconds after the opening face-off, but Kahn netted the equalizer just two minutes later.

Jason Grier scored the next two goals three minutes apart to make it a 3-1 game. Cohasset answered back with three unanswered goals, Durkin sandwiching a pretty underhanded tally between Davis' first two scores.

Jason Grier knotted things back up at 4-4 less than a minute later when he beat Cohasset goalie Kyle Weber on a break in.

Kahn put his team up at the break, though, netting his second of the night 15 seconds before the horn.

The offensive story of the third quarter went A. Grier, Kahn, Kahn, A Grier. Adam's secodn tally came just before the buzzer sounded to pull the Clippers back within one at 7-6.

It took Kahn just 21 seconds in to the final frame to slip one past Norwell goalie Brendan MacDonald for an 8-6 Skippers lead, but Norwell attacker Ryan Murphy cut the deficit once again to one four minutes later, finishing on a beautiful pass from Donovan.

Davis' third goal of the game near the midpoint of the fourth started the decisive 3-0 run for the Skippers. Libby punched home a killer goal to make it 10-7 with 3:35 remaining, and Previte added the real back breaker just 42 seconds later.

"Our guys wanted it, but it just seemed like Cohasset wanted it a little bit more at the end" said Norwell's coach Granara. "They just seemed to have more energy than us in the in the fourth quarter."

The Norwell coach felt the nine day layoff between the regular season finale and Saturday's post-season opener might well have worked against his team. Conversely, he felt Cohasset was helped by their preliminary round laugher over Lynn English on Tuesday, 21-4.

"You can work your hardest in practice, but there's just no way to duplicate the intensity of a real game, and that counts double or triple when it comes to the tourney," Granara appraised.

On the flip side of that coin, Cohasset's coach Orcutt is thrilled by the way his team has turned it up a notch for the post-season, and was obviously hoping that would carry over into yesterday's scheduled showdown with Hingham, the team that defeated the Skippers in the Div. 2 state championship game last spring.

"We're playing with more intensity now," offered Orcutt following the Norwell game before finding out whether his team would be playing Hingham or Sandwich. "Either opponent is a big challenge, but we can recall what happened a year ago, and understand that the regular season is history. We're ready to make some noise again."

Semi-sweet loss for girls tennis

Gold rallied to win the 12th set, forcing things to a tiebreaker. The slugfest went back and forth, but the Westwood pair was finally able to net consecutive points to escape with set, match and MATCH.

The Cohasset wins were delivered by frosh phenom Kate Stone, who swept her second singles match, 6-0 and 6-0, and the first doubles team of Julie Shea and Kate Englander, 7-6 (7-3), 6-4. At the time, that put the Lady Skippers up, 2-0.

Sophomore Holly Graham fell at third singles to a more seasoned Kara Kouri, 4-6, 3-6.

Top singles player Lindsey Grossman, a junior, renewed acquaintances with old rival Melissa White. Grossman beat the Westwood senior in a previous three set thriller, but White returned the favor Tuesday, splitting the first two sets, 6-4, 5-7, and then taking the third, 6-1

The Lady Skippers made this triumphant return to the South Sectional bracket's Final Four with a 4-1 win just 24 hours earlier over previously undefeated Canton.

The Lady Skippers qualified for the Sectional Semi-finals for the second year in a row, to earn their second banner for the new gymnasium, which will open this fall. The win marked Cohasset's 15th in a row, including the final 3 of the regular season, and tournament wins over Ursuline and Canton.

Canton, which went 15-0 in the regular season to receive the number 3 seed in the tourney, a preliminary round bye and quarterfinal home match, was eliminated from the playoffs by Cohasset for the second straight year.

Cohasset took down Canton, 5-0, in Cohasset last year to advance to the semis.

Leading the way for her team was junior captain Grossman, who edged Marie Sakolovsky in a close 'battle of the teams' aces, 6-4, 6-4.

Grossman beat Sakolovsky in the 2001 post-season, 6-0, 6-3, and held off the talented underclassman this time around, despite falling behind 2-0 in the second set.

Freshman Elizabeth Stone, who was not really tested at second singles in league play, showed her dominance over the number two of one of the area's best teams with a 6-0, 6-0 decision.

Cohasset's first doubles pair of Kate Englander and Julie Shea held off Canton's talented duo 6-3, 6-3, and the second doubles team of Kelly Stone and Courtney Caron followed their lead, taking their point with a 6-4, 6-4 win.

At third singles, sophomore Holly Graham was the only Lady Skipper to lose on the day, getting bested 6-2, 6-2.

Unfortunately for Cohasset, bumping off the third seed meant only that second seeded Westwood stood between the Lady Skipper and their first

Last Friday, Cohasset defeated 12-4 Ursuline in the preliminary match-up, which was given a 1 p.m. start to accomodate the high number of prom-goers on the Cohasset team. Despite the earliness of the match, Cohasset did get a relatively high fan base for the match, which helped propel the team to an easy 5-0 win.

Ursuline's four losses for the year were at the hands of Notre Dame, who won the Christian Academy league, and non-league Mansfield. Ursuline came in to the match riding high after wins over the strong programs of Brockton, Austin Prep, and Mount Alvernia.

However, one of their first doubles players, Kayleigh McDonald, got into a car accident on the way to the match. Although she was okay, seventh grader Linda Donohugh was forced to fill in, throwing off a good deal of the team's chemistry, according to long time Ursuline coach Patricia Hornblower.

Upstart boys' season closed out

Surprising young CHS tennis squad no match for veteran Medfield

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The boys tennis team's unexpectedly successful season came to a close last Thursday in the first round of the South Sectional tournament. The Skippers were taken down 5-0 by a very strong Medfield squad, as the Eagles moved on to a quarterfinal match-up against 16-1 Norwell.

Medfield went 11-4 overall this year, including 9-3 in the Tri-Valley League, good enough for second place behind Westwood, who drew a top seed in the Sectional bracket. Medfield, making the tournament for the 10th straight year, was led by five seniors, all starters, including Tri-Valley All-Stars in their number one and number two singles players.

"They had varsity experience across the board," assessed first year Cohasset coach Kent Parrot. "It is something we would like to have in the next few years."

The All-Stars led the way for the Eagles, as Medfield became the first team to shut out the Skippers since Norwell did it on April 8th.

Senior Greg Zaia, the number one for Medfield, had trouble with his SSL All-Star counterpart, captain David Ingber in the first set, edging the junior 7-5. However, he recovered to take the second set 6-1 in a straight set match that took almost two hours.

Senior Pete O'Brien handed sophomore Tim Anton his fourth loss of the year, with a 6-0, 6-1 performance. His tough serve and quick hands at the net kept the pace of the game in his favor.

"Their number one and number two can play with any one and two in the area," noted Parrot. "This was a very tough team."

Cohasset sophomore Jessie Brewer's consistency game did not have its normal wearing effect on his powerful senior opponent, as he lost 6-1, 6-1.

First doubles went the same way, as junior Ross Lieb-Lappen and sophomore Andrew Wise, who only started playing together a few weeks ago, lost to a tandem with four years experience together.

The second doubles team of junior Scott Faber and Andrew Busk lost the first set 6-1, and the match was cut short because the team outcome had already been decided.

Cohasset entered the tournament at 8-6, including an 8-4 record in the South Shore League, good enough for second place behind powerhouse Norwell.

The two non-league losses, both to high seeded Div. 1 team Hingham, probably kept Cohasset out of a first round home match against a much more manageable opponent.

However, when the scheduling occurred, nobody thought the boys tennis team would come close to a return trip to the playoffs. Only two players from last year's squad came out for the team this year, Ingber and Brewer.

All seven other players either did not do a spring sport or were recruited from baseball or track.

"We have completely exceeded my preseason expectations," reported Parrot after his team ended the season with a 5-0 win over Carver to clinch second place in the league. "I am very happy with the way our team performed."

Next year, the team should be much improved, as no one will be lost to graduation, and the squad receive some extra firepower from the upcoming freshman class.

No shame in defeat

spectacular variety.

So, on Saturday, the Cohasset girls, earning the 18th seed, began post-season play for the second time in the four year history of the program with a preliminary match on the road against 15th seeded Hopkinton.

It was a fast start that propelled the Lady Skippers to their first-ever playoff win, as they took a 3-0 lead on first period goals by Sheerin, Genovese and team leading scorer Maura McKenney, and never relinquished it. There were, however, some anxious moments down the stretch, as the host Hillers rallied for two goals in the final four minutes to close to 7-6.

The hard pressing Hopkinton squad was then able to draw a penalty at the top of the fan with approximately 20 seconds remaining, but Petrakis was able to flash out her right foot at the last second for the kick save on the ensuing free shot for her 12th and final save of the game, and Cohasset defenders corralled the rebound and ran out the clock.

"We had the prom the night before and I think the girls were dragging a little bit there at the end," conceded Sweeney. "But they fought hard, and pulled out a big win for this program that we can build on."

Hopkinton closed to 4-2 at half, and got as close as 4-3 with an early third quarter tally, but Cohasset went on a 3-1 run to open up another three goal lead midway through the fourth, with McKenney netting two of her game high four goals over that stretch.

"These girls really knew how to respond under pressure," Sweeney lauded on his charges. "With all of the close games we had with teams like Bourne and Scituate and Sandwich, we became a very tough team mentally. These Cohasset girls didn't get flustered. They played smart, as well as hard."

This historic win set the stage for Monday's clash with second seeded Westwood, the team that handed three seed Hingham (16-1-1) its only loss of the season. Hingham, of course, had defeated Cohasset in Pilgrim Conference play 22-1 just a few weeks earlier.

So what was Sweeney's reaction to the 21-9 loss?

"Nothing but highlights for us, as far as I'm concerned," gushed the rookie head coach, who plans to remain involved with the team in some capacity next year. "If you consider what (Westwood) did to Hingham, and what Hingham did to us, you can see how far the girls came as a team, and how hard they fought in this game."

To the surprise and consternation of the hometown Westwood fans, the visiting Lady Skippers kept the game within three goals in to the late stages of the first half. Unfortunately, the host Wolverines potted a pair in the final minute before the horn to go in to the break with an 8-3 edge.

The second half opened with both teams going full bore offensively. Cohasset again stunned the partisan crowd by going toe-to-toe with the explosive Wolverines. At the midpoint of the third quarter, this was a 12-7 game.

"When we got the ball, we scored," explained Sweeney. "They really couldn't do much about the Kristin and Maura. I think those two girls really surprised them."

Sheerin and McKenney each finished the game with four goals and an assist.

The problem was the Skippers couldn't gain control often enough against the slick-passing Wolverines attack, and that became the tale of the second half, the hosts settling in to become more deliberate with their passes as the Skippers understandably became more desperate in their defensive maneuverings.

"Once they got the lead up to six or seven, they just played keep away," said Sweeney. "They just waited for us to over-commit or make mistakes. They definitely had the talent to pull that off."

Lacrosse Notes

The first of Sheerin's four goals on the day gave her 150 for her career, which makes her one of only a handful of South Shore laxers to reach this total. Cohasset's all-time leading scorer finished her senior season with 47 goals and 21 assists for 68 points.

This was actually the first season of her four that Sheerin did not lead the team in scoring. McKenney, a junior, claimed that honor, finishing with 75 points (53 goals, 22 assists).

Genovese added a goal and an assist in the Westwood game, raising her season's total to 26 goals and 38 points. This was the second consecutive 25 goals season for the junior, who missed four games this season due to injury.

Sweeney figures these two girls, along with sophomore Nicole Turgiss (22 goals, 20 assists) and "extremely promising" freshman Lauren Rizzotti (six goals, five assists) will all be able to take it up a notch next year to help compensate for the loss to the caps and gowns of Sheerin.

Sweeney also said he is excited to return seven of his top eight defensive players (with only Carlie Carter being lost to graduation), all of whom he says came a long way this season in their understanding of the game and the system he tried to put in place.

- The coach also had high praise for senior Maggie O'Neill. Sweeney recruited O'Neill, a standout soccer player, to the team this season, and rotated her quite a bit between offense and defense.

"Maggie was a big piece of the puzzle for us this season," said Sweeney. "You need girls like that who are athletic and flexible. She did a lot of things for us that didn't necessarily show up in the score book, but that made us a better team."

Next week, a full wrap up of girls lacrosse season.

NDA graduates told they can expect the unexpected

Storm didn't dampen traditional ceremony

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The 135 members of the Notre Dame Academy Class of 2002 learned life can be unpredictable, as the girls — wearing the traditional full-length white gowns — stoically endured a smorgasbord from Mother Nature on Sunday.

But no doubt with the help of prayers from Sr. Barbara S. Barry, a squall that plummeted the temperature some 20 degrees and uprooted umbrellas mid-way through the conferral of diplomas – soon went away as mysteriously as it arrived.

"Let's pray the clouds go away for the next half hour," the Catholic girls' school principal told the gathering of family and graduates seated without shelter from the gusts and pelting rain on the field hockey field.

The traditional graduation ceremony got underway at 1 p.m. under Technicolor skies, as the graduates proceeded onto the field to the whir of camcorders and click of cameras. Grandmothers and grandfathers dressed in their finest, along with parents, siblings and friends rose from their seats to applaud the processional on what was one of the most important days in the girls' young lives.

The weather seemed to take a role in the program, as keynote speaker Sr. Catherine Fleming, who is leaving NDA to accept a leadership position in the order of the Sisters of Notre Dame, told the graduates their lives will be full of uncertainty.

"You have been given the gifts, the talents, the skills to be successful," she said. "It won't be easy. Every generation has had to deal with crisis and uncertainty — Sept. 11 and the crisis in the church have complicated your world in a way that never could have been imagined."

But Fleming said the school had prepared the girls well.

"You are women of great courage, great intellect and great faith," the assistant principal said. "Now go out there and make a difference!"

And trained the graduates are — not only spiritually, but in the academic, sports and arts arenas. A sign heralding the NDA state championship golf team hangs over the front door of the high school off Main Street (Rte. 228) in Hingham. Senior awards included those for students, who excelled in theology and a range of academic subjects, the fine arts, and sports. And the class received more than $7 million in scholarships and grants from colleges, and corporate and community sponsors. An impressive array of colleges accepting the graduates ranged from Harvard and Georgetown universities to Colby and Dartmouth colleges.

Valedictorian Michelle Sonia of Hansen, who won the oratory contest sponsored by the American Legion, told her classmates to take chances and follow their dreams.

"Don't ever forsake your dreams. Don't ever let a chance escape you without giving it all of your heart and soul," she said. "You have to be willing to take that leap and step into the unknown."

In a very literary speech, salutatorian Kaitlin Burek of Norwell used the poem "Ithaka" by Constantine Cavafy, as a metaphor for life.

"The poem stresses that a person's final destination is not nearly as important as the means by which one attains her ultimate destiny," Kaitlin said, adding the class should make choices so they prove to be wise investments later on.

One of the afternoon's highlights was the senior class gift presented by class president Caitlin Murphy of Hingham.

The class has not only paid for, but tackled the red tape at the state level to have a highway sign installed on Route 3 indicating which exit to take to reach the school that draws from some 26 area communities.

The clouds darkened and wind picked up several times during the ceremony only to give way to blue skies. But as the conferral of diplomas got underway, a brief storm took over the beginning of the alphabet only to subside mid-way through the list. The girls, who, in keeping with tradition, were each handed a single red rose as they left the stage, made the best of it all. Sr. Fleming read each name proudly and no one was rushed along.

Warmth and sun soon returned and Fleming declared to thunderous applause and cheers:

"I present to you the still beautiful, but a little wet, Class of 2002!"

East comes west

Duxbury museum hosts The Art of India

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

"Small Worlds/The Art of India," this summer's major exhibit at Duxbury's Art Complex Museum, suggests a certain need or desire to find common ground between the distant cultures of the East and the West.

The title concept could be seen that way, and the ideal of bridging cultures may become even more urgent by the fact that India in the current times is as much swept up in the horrors and politics of international terrorism as any other nation on the globe. The museum's Senior Curator Catherine Mayes admits such notions might occur to some viewers of the show, but explains that the exhibit's title mainly describes the nature of Indian art itself — its classic traditions of smaller-subject painting, sculpture, jewelry and jade and eye for finer line and shade and more up-close, intimate detail than most traditional Western art.

These definitive qualities are on display in fine splendor at the Art Complex Museum through Sept. 8. The exhibit showcases more than 400 years of India's art culture, from classic works by its traditional masters to contemporary interpretations of present-day artists.

"The essence of the Indian art tradition is that the paintings and drawings are conceived within smaller frames and the details are meant to be fine and intimate," said Mayes. "The reason for this is that all of the traditional pictures were originally parts of books of various types and meant to be viewed while being held in one's hand. For this purpose the pictures were also always kept in very pristine condition. The smaller images would really draw the viewers in and give them a very intimate relationship with the subjects."

Mayes noted the exhibit may have a certain timely quality in the world of post-September 11, but also mentioned that the show has been 2-1/2 years in the planning. The total of 45 paintings and drawings, twelve sculptures and eight jewelry items in the show were chosen from more than 400 pieces from the museum's own private Indian art collection dating back even several years before the museum first opened in 1971. Choices were made with the consultation of scholars from Boston's Museum of Fine Arts and the University of Vermont.

The traditional paintings and drawings, dating from the 15th through 19th centuries, fill out the main gallery, along with the odd sculpture and jewelry piece. Instead of a staid chronological order, the pictures are arranged in a more creative set of five categories by theme — Gods and Deities, Love, History, Portraiture and Heroes/Battles/Hunt.

A variety of ancient Indian traditions come into play and interplay throughout these series of pictures, from the major Indian religions of Hindu and Jain to the two most time-honored painting traditions. One, known as Rajput, is more focused on religious themes and often fantastic imagery and mythology surely esoteric to most Western viewers and painted in a native, bold, flat color style. The other, Mughal, is mainly concerned with portraiture by court artists and influences by Persian styles of more color varieties and even greater attention to detail. The Rajput pieces represent all of the major Hindu deities, including Brahma, Vishnu (who in his incarnation of Krishna is well focused with his mythical girlfriend Radha in the Love series), Shiva and Durga.

One of the most intriguing of these works is also among the exhibit organizers' own favorites. Rama, Lakshmana, Hanuman and Jambavan Attack Ravana, an early 19th century painting included in the Heroes/Battles/Hunt series, depicts all of the major heroic figures of Indian mythology, from Vishnu's warrior incarnation (Rama) and his brother (Lakshmana), the allied leaders of the tribal monkeys (Hanuman) and bears (Jambavan) to their enemy in battle, Ravana, a fearsome, ten-headed, fifteen-armed demon who has abducted Rama's wife. The piece is alive with vibrant color and intense action.

The Contemporary Responses half of the exhibit is featured in the museum's middle hall, and showcases modern artist works in the tradition of Indian miniature painting well represented in the main gallery. The five current-generation artists spotlighted include both Indians and Americans who have devoted time and study in both countries, and some of whom favor larger images and canvases than their traditional predecessors.

Among the most impressive items in this section is the painting series by Pakistan-born, now Boston-based artist Ambreen Butt titled Vicious Cycle from the Home and World Series, 2002, which is actually a direct address to the post-September 11 international crisis, rich with symbolic imagery and deadly irony. Other works are by artists Sukanya Rahman, John Lavertu, Pamela Murphy and Pamela Singh and cover a range from paintings and drawings to mixed media as well as wildly inventive blends of Indian and American images.

The Art Complex Museum is located at 189 Alden Street in Duxbury. For more information on the exhibit and gallery hours call (781) 934-6634.

Music Circus raises tent on 51st season

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

There are few more sure signs of summer on the South Shore than the raising of the tent at the South Shore Music Circus (SSMC) in Cohasset. That familiar ritual will happen later this month when the Music Circus opens its 51st season. This summer will see change, too, both on-stage and off.

"We open on June 15 with 'Blues Traveler,' a great live show for us to begin our season," says Music Circus spokesperson Chris Conway. "We're expanding in a lot of ways this year. Irish Tenor Ronan Tynan (July 20) is with us for the first time and that show has already sold out. Huey Lewis & The News (August 8-9) will also be back for the first time in eight years. David Cassidy (July 21), a music sensation in the 1970s, joins us in support of his chart-climbing new album "Then and Now." We're also pleased to again be presenting Pat Benatar (August 13) who stands as one of the top female rock singers of all time."

If early signs are any indication, interest in the season will be strong. For the first time in 51 years, SSMC has completely sold outs its "Inner Circle" memberships for

'Fears' factor

Ben Affleck becomes Jack Ryan III

By Stephen Schaefer
BOSTON HERALD

Ben Affleck stepped into Harrison Ford's shoes last weekend to play Jack Ryan, novelist Tom Clancy's CIA super-op who served Ford so well in "Clear and Present Danger" and "Patriot Games." Yet when Affleck talks about taking on the role, he doesn't mention it was his idea.

"When they first called me about it, I thought, 'Well, how is this going to work? This is impossible. This can't work,' " the actor says, referring to the fact that he is much younger than Clancy's fictional hero.

Producer Mace Neufeld tells a different story. Neufeld, who began the film series with Alec Baldwin as Ryan in "The Hunt for Red October," credits Affleck with solving his casting dilemma after Ford bowed out.

"We worked for a year-and-a-half on developing a screenplay," he says. "In the public's mind, Harrison had gone from CIA analyst to deputy director to president (in 'Air Force One') and when we couldn't come up with a script for 'Sum of All Fears,' Harrison said, 'I'm going to make 'K-19: The Widowmaker,' and I was left holding the Ryan bag.

"A week later Ben's agent called and said Ben would love to do Jack Ryan. And he was 28. I thought 15 minutes and called him back."

By ignoring continuity, substantially revising Clancy's mammoth 800-page bestseller and getting the author's approval on Affleck, Neufeld and Paramount Pictures hope to rejuvenate their franchise.

"The Sum of All Fears" is now not only the story of a president (played by James Cromwell) facing a nefarious plot to bring the world to nuclear destruction but also of Ryan's parallel rise in the CIA from Russian desk analyst to the James Bond-style secret operative Ford so easily embodied. Morgan Freeman co-stars as Ryan's mentor.

At a recent press conference in Los Angeles where he's currently filming the latest Marvel Comics' superhero adventure, "Daredevil," Affleck is in high spirits.

"I'm a huge fan of the books — I've read all of the Jack Ryan books," he says.

The former Cambridge resident insists he wouldn't have taken the role unless it was re-styled for someone his age.

"What I thought was interesting was taking it back to showing this guy when he was a little unsure of himself and making sort of mistakes — before he polished himself up; when he was a little rough and a little uncertain and halting and wearing the wrong clothes to work and being admonished for that. That is something Harrison Ford would never do."

Affleck laughs. "I felt that I can play a guy who is learning on the job and still figuring it out. I can't play an icon. And I certainly can't follow one up."

Does he feel pressure from the previous films' success?

"I would hate to be the guy that screwed up the Jack Ryan franchise, because they'll put that on my tombstone," he says, laughing. "You know what I mean?

Balsamic chicken

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

There is nothing new about combining balsamic vinegar with chicken. Both Lidia Bastianich and Lynn Rosetto Casper offer recipes with this simple marriage of flavors. My goal was a simple, midweek chicken dinner that was based on this modest culinary pairing

Chicken thighs are the best bet for this type of recipe since they are juicier and more flavorful than breasts. Skinless thighs were best since I was planning to cook them in liquid rather than roasting. I started by seasoning the thighs and then sautéing them in an oil/butter combination

This, I hoped, would provide a good fond (browned bits) at the bottom of the pan on which I could build a simple sauce

Next, I removed the browned chicken and sautéed one large sliced onion.

Its sweetness would prove a nice counterpoint to the vinegar. As for the vinegar itself, I started with a 1/4 cup of balsamic but also tested red wine and white balsamic vinegar but they were both too acidic. I now wanted to balance the vinegar with sugar and preferred 2 tablespoons light brown sugar. Now I had a sweet/sour combination that made the dish a lot more interesting. Next up was the addition of some tomato and Muir Glen diced tomato was best. (You can use any brand as long as it is packed in juice, not purée, although Muir Glen is my favorite based on a taste test.) Two tablespoons of capers added an extra dimension and some fresh basil added just before serving rounded out the dish. Other herbs fought with the main ingredients

The dish itself is simple enough. The chicken thighs are browned and removed, the onion is softened, and then the pan is deglazed with chicken stock. After about a minute the tomato, vinegar, sugar, capers and the chicken are added. Once the ingredients are brought to a boil the pan is covered and left to simmer for 10 minutes. The chicken is flipped over and cooked for 10 minutes longer. To finish I stirred in the chopped basil. It0s a simple, quick but bold enough to even satisfy company

BALSAMIC CHICKEN WITH VINEGAR, TOMATOES, AND CAPERS

Only use diced tomatoes packed in juice, not purée. If you cannot find diced tomatoes, use whole tomatoes packed in juice and dice them yourself. Be sure to drain off and use some of the juice along with the tomatoes

8 chicken thighs, skin removed rinsed and patted dry

Salt and pepper

1 tablespoon plus one teaspoon olive oil

1 tablespoon plus one teaspoon butter

1 large onion, peeled, halved and cut into 1/4 inch slices

1/2 cup chicken stock, low sodium or homemade preferred

1 cup diced tomato along with their juice, Muir Glen preferred

1/4 cup balsamic vinegar

2 tablespoons light brown sugar

2 tablespoons capers, drained

1 tablespoons fresh basil, thinly sliced

1. Liberally season chicken thighs with salt and pepper on both sides

Heat a large heavy-duty skillet with a cover over medium high heat. When hot add one tablespoon each olive oil and butter. Once the butter has stopped foaming swirl pan to evenly coat the bottom with olive oil/butter mixture

Add the chicken and brown well on both sides, about eight minutes. Remove chicken pieces and set aside. Pour off any accumulated fat from the skillet and reduce heat to medium

2. Add the remaining one teaspoon each olive oil and butter to the skillet

Once the butter has stopped foaming swirl to evenly coat the bottom of the pan. Add the onion and cook, stirring frequently until softened and translucent, about 5 minutes. Add the chicken stock and scrape up any browned bits stuck to the bottom of the pan using a wooden spoon or spatula

Add the tomato, vinegar, sugar, and capers to the pan and stir to combine

Arrange the chicken pieces in one layer. Bring the liquid to a boil and reduce heat to maintain a simmer. Cover and cook for 10 minutes. Turn chicken pieces over, cover and cook for an additional 10 minutes or until the chicken is firm to the touch, the juice run clear and the interior temperature is 165 degrees. If the sauce is very thin you may increase the heat and boil to thicken for one to two minutes. Stir in basil. Taste for seasonings and adjust with salt and pepper if needed. Serve immediately

The Battle of the bugs

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Among the pendulous branches of a stately weeping cherry, a gregarious catbird cheerfully chirps its varied melody while systematically devouring tiny green caterpillars one after another. Despite the continuous efforts of a diversity of feathered visitors, the delicate, emerging leaves of this and many other ornamental trees and shrubs in my garden have become shredded and lacy as a result of another infestation of spring canker worms. Maples, apples, cherries, crabapples and roses are only of few of the woody plants that have been nearly defoliated in recent years by these voracious pests. Dangling by thin silky strands, it often appears as if the little green inchworms are an invasion of miniature paratroopers as they lower themselves to the gardens below, stripping the tender leaves of columbines and turning the spotted leaves of lungworts into Swiss cheese.

From the day we turn over our first bit of earth and plant our first tree, lawn, shrub, vegetable garden or flowerbed, the forces of nature suddenly take on new meaning. Bugs, slugs, grubs and critters seem to materialize overnight, attacking precious acquisitions at every turn and many a garage becomes an arsenal of chemical warfare.

Many of these intruders do their ravaging under the cover of darkness, making it difficult to determine the source of the damage. Clever or cowardly, depending upon your perspective, slugs, snails, caterpillars and furry creatures munch away while we sleep, disappearing by dawn's early light. Other invaders like spider mites or chinch bugs are so tiny that gardeners may not realize their presence until much of the damage has been done. Still others, like the incredibly grotesque tomato hornworm or the green cabbage worms are so perfectly camouflaged that they go undetected until they reach gargantuan proportions or leave the plants riddled with holes.

For most passionate gardeners, our interaction with nature evolves over the years to become a love-hate relationship. At one moment we delight in the sighting of bunnies playfully hopping about the lawn, only to curse their very existence hours later when we discover our tulips decapitated and perennials stripped of their leaves. We smile as we witness the fragile beauty of a colorful butterfly floating from flower to flower, yet become aggravated when voracious caterpillars defoliate our treasured plants. To garden is to engage in a never-ending tug-of-war with the good, the bad and the ugly.

Having spent substantial funds over the years to support my plant habit, I feel compelled to protect my investment in plant material, but as a lover of birds, butterflies and wildlife, I have come to doubt the safety and wisdom of using potent chemicals. In years past, every time I witnessed an intruder, I grabbed a bottle off the shelf, mixed up a foul-smelling magic potion and whacked the little varmints. Unfortunately, I quickly discovered that the more I sprayed, the more I had to spray as secondary problem pests quickly appeared.

In recent years I have pursued the latest trend in dealing with garden intruders known as integrated pest management (IPM). This common sense approach promotes prevention first through the selection of pest and disease resistant varieties and the provision of optimum growing conditions for these plants including proper light, moisture and nutrients. Healthy plants are considerably less susceptible to pests and diseases. Sound cultural practices should begin with proper soil preparation, which for many plants involves enriching sandy or clay soils with organic material that will retain moisture and nutrients but promote drainage. Deep watering once or twice a week, when permitted, will promote deep root systems making plants less vulnerable to drought stress. Mulches help to retain valuable moisture and keep down competitive weeds. Slow release fertilizers with a low percentage of nitrogen will strengthen root systems and promote growth without encouraging lush foliage that attracts a wealth of insect intruders.

Regular observation and monitoring of the landscape is also a key factor in IPM's success. Identification of the source of damage is an essential starting point. I have acquired several handy references over the years to assist in recognizing my pests including guides on garden insects and caterpillars. I welcome the larvae of butterflies and acquire many plants specifically to attract these caterpillars while handpicking and squishing the annoying worms that belong to destructive moths. Chemical controls include Bt (Bacillus thuringiensis), which may be used for caterpillars in the early stages and as a last resort, the chemical Sevin. It should be noted that Sevin is harmful to bees, butterflies, birds and wildlife and should be applied very early or late in the day when many of these creatures are not active.

The key word is balance, and caution should be used when applying pesticides as many of these broad-spectrum chemicals harm the good guys as well as the targeted pests. When the natural controls of beneficial insects, spiders and birds are reduced or removed, a host of other pests or problems are likely to appear.

Early detection of problems will minimize the need for drastic action. Gardeners must determine their own level of tolerance. When the damage exceeds your threshold or threatens the ultimate survival of a plant, seek the least hazardous method of control by employing physical and cultural controls first, then biological controls, and as a last resort, chemical controls.

Music Circus raises tent on 51st season

2002. Memberships provide access to seats before they go on sale to the general public, discounts on selected shows, and reduced handling fees. "The memberships clubs — including the comparable "Gold Circle" at the companion Cape Cod Melody Tent — are unique to us, something we can offer because we are an independent venue."

In addition to concerts by pop and rock acts, the SSMC will try something a little different this year when it presents "Stars of 'Days of Our Lives'," (July 6) featuring five cast members from NBC-TV's top-rated daytime drama. Two of the soap's perennial leading men Drake Hogestyn ("John Black") and Peter Reckell ("Bo Brady") will be among the troupe of actors in a show that features Matt Cedeno ("Brandon Walker") as master of ceremonies.

"The actors will provide first hand accounts of their work in daytime television and even reenact favorite scenes from the show. They will also take questions from the audience," explains Conway.

Even amidst the changes, Conway promises that longtime SSMC patrons will have plenty of familiar favorites to choose from, including Anne Murray (June 23), Johnny Mathis (Aug. 17), and Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme (Aug. 25).

Although they still haven't found a way to air condition the tent, some audience members will find themselves more comfortable this year.

"Not only do we have a new tent, but we've also added some new state-of-the-art seats in our premium seating area. They are roomier and even offer more leg room," says Conway.

It's back to the 80s with Huey Lewis & the News performing two shows Aug. 8 & 9.

Clancy fans would come and throw tomatoes at my grave: 'We hate you, Affleck, you buried us!' "

Affleck has a surprise spring hit — and the best reviews of his career — with "Changing Lanes," but he also is well aware of the fickleness of his profession. "The reality is, like any movie, Hollywood is basically success-driven," he says. "If the movie does well, and people go see it, then they'll want to do another one. If it doesn't, they'll be going" — Affleck lets loose with a few sobs — " 'Why? Why, Lord, why did we go with Affleck?' "

This witty, self-deprecating Affleck isn't much different than the pre-rehab Affleck of last year. But, as he faces his 30th birthday in August, the actor is reflective about what the future holds.

"I'm really not that fired up about [turning 30]," he says. "I take it to mean that all my friends are like sorta getting married and having kids, and I think, 'Oh, that's the point after which if you're not starting to think of marriage and having kids, you're not fun.' In your 20s, you're immature; and in your 30s, you have a Peter Pan complex."

Yet marriage and kids, even without a Mrs. Affleck on the horizon, do seem to be on the actor's mind. "I would like that; I think that would be so much more satisfying and interesting for me, personally in my life, than just to continue to make movies," he says. "I mean, there's a whole other step of life, which is family and children."

Not that he's dissatisfied with the way things are going. "I like the path that I'm on," he says. "And my happiness also doesn't hinge on whether people like 'The Sum of All Fears.' I couldn't always say that before."

But can he really say that now?

"I say that now," he says, laughing. "But if you guys write bad things about me, I'll be in the bathroom, hanging by a wire."

That's not likely. As Neufeld says, "There's a new Tom Clancy-Jack Ryan book in August and we have first option. That deals with a young Jack Ryan. I wonder why Tom did that?"

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 5

Gear up for a hectic day. The Aries moon forms six major alignments to planets. Stop, look and listen. Move cautiously in business or romance. Pay attention to details in order to avoid making careless errors. Tackle jobs that need redoing, repainting, repair. Keep your nose to the grindstone. Hard work will pay off.

THURSDAY, JUNE 6

Yesterday's advice applies to today as well. The Aries moon continues to generate a quick pace. Carefully organize your time so that you can be productive. At 5:47 p.m. the moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. A Taurus moon takes over at 8:07 p.m. An applying polarity of the sun and Pluto may bring up old wounds or hidden resentments. Take extra quiet time for yourself. Forgive and forget; leave the past behind.

FRIDAY, JUNE 7

A lunar alignment to Mars at 9:10 a.m. urges you to get an early start to this day. You can be most productive in the morning. Influences turn around completely in the afternoon. The Taurus moon forms a 90-degree contact to Neptune at 5:26 p.m., bringing a lull period, when energy is deflated. Kick back and mellow out completely this evening.

SATURDAY, JUNE 8

At 11:12 a.m. the planet Mercury, standing at the first degree of Gemini, begins to travel in direct motion. The next Mercury retrograde period will occur in September. The Taurus moon forms easy aspects to Jupiter in the morning and Venus in the afternoon. Gardening, arts and crafts get the green light today. Pursue activities that help you to relax and unwind.

SUNDAY, JUNE 9

The Taurus moon aligns with Uranus at 4:14 a.m. and becomes inactive. The final windup to this month's new moon begins at 6:29 a.m., when the moon enters Gemini. An alignment of the sun and Saturn generates a serious mood. Spend time alone. Reflect on and learn from past experiences. Let go of situations that are beyond your control.

MONDAY, JUNE 10

Wake up in a good mood. The dark side of a new moon is in full force and effect. This new moon is intensified by a solar eclipse. People may be temperamental and difficult to get along with. Open the doors to a higher level of communication. This is a day to clean out, let go and prepare the way for new activities. The Gemini moon forms potentially stressful contacts to Pluto at 12:53 p.m. and Saturn at 5:26 p.m. The solar eclipse/new moon culminates at 7:46 p.m., 20-degrees Gemini.

TUESDAY, JUNE 11

The green light for new starts is on this morning. Influences are prime for new beginnings across the board. Signs contract, promote ideas, launch ventures before 12:04 p.m., when the Gemini moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. At 2:15 p.m. the moon enters emotional Cancer, placing the focus on home, family and domestic responsibilities. Share a special dinner with family and close friends this evening.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 12

A lunar alignment to Mars can make for a rough start to this day. Drive with care. Be more diplomatic. Give others plenty of space. Storm clouds move out by 9:00 a.m., and the remainder of the day rates high for getting things done. New starts in your business or personal life are recommended.

As flames break through the roof at 83 Summer St., Cohasset firefighters scale the aerial ladder to attack the blaze. More than 5,000 gallons of water a minute were used to douse the fire. At right: Two firefighters pause by a fire truck that has a reminder of Sept. 11 in the window. Some 70 firefighters were called in to knock down Tuesday's attic fire.

Blaze destroys antique Summer Street house

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

As orange flames soared high above the house and the smell of smoke choked the harbor, hundreds watched in horror as the house at 83 Summer St. burned Tuesday afternoon. With water cascading out of the second floor porch and windows, some 70 firefighters from seven South Shore towns attacked the blaze.

Helicopters hovered overhead and streams of water flowed down the street as spectators huddled together.

A sea of red fire engines dominated the view on the street which was cordoned off to prevent vehicle access. Residents who walked, or ran to the scene, stood with hands covering their mouths and eyes red with the irritation of smoke, and tears.

"I'm just stunned," said Mardi Wood, a neighbor who lives two houses down. "I've never seen anything like it."

Similar sentiments were expressed by many who watched the Federalist-style house burn.

"I feel terrible for the family," said Peggy Soltesz, who lives around the corner or Border Street. "They're so nice and for this to happen is just awful."

"We then went into a defensive mode and brought in the heavy artillery."
— Fire Capt. Mark Trask

The gutters and shingles, which were once affixed to the roof, systematically popped off as firefighters turned their powerful hoses on the area.

The four-alarm fire, which began in the attic, was the largest in Cohasset in years and took rescue crews more than three hours to extinguish. Liane Seppala and her daughter Dagmar were the only ones home at the time and fortunately, were able to get out of the house unscathed. Her husband James was at work in Boston when he got the call and Axel, their son who turns seven on Monday, was at school.

James Seppala said the house, which was built in the 1830s, needed plenty of renovations when his family moved in three years ago. He said the attic was empty except for some boxes and presents hidden there for his son's birthday party on Monday.

Seppala, whose family is from Duxbury, said the house had been through inspections and had fire detectors installed. Although a friend came up to him on Tuesday and offered him a fully furnished house to rent

Will work to mitigate effects of construction

By Mary Ford

If clothes are a gauge that the Greenbush project is entering a new phase, then the baseball cap and work boots worn by the project's new community liaison surely mean times are changing.

"There are certain things that come along with construction. We try to minimize those."

With the band playing Pomp and Circumstance and teary eyed parents looking on, members of the Cohasset High School Class of 2002 received their diplomas Saturday.

The hour and a half ceremony featured speeches by both school administrators and class officials and ended with a big cheer when Principal Michael Jones announced the students' names.

"In a few years we will be the generation entrusted with power."
— Robin Murphy, class president

"At this time, I certify that these members of the Class of 2002 have satisfied the requirements for graduation from Cohasset High School as established by the Cohasset School Committee and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts," Jones said.

Students, some who adorned patriotic sashes and others who wore gold cords signifying they graduated with honors, hugged one another and lamented the loss of their high school years while

Correction

A page one story on proposed changes to the Town Common in last week's Mariner incorrectly stated Nancy Sandell made a presentation on history of the common to workshop participants. The story should have said Nancy Denig of the architectural firm, Carr Lynch/Denig Herman and Sandell, made the presentation. The Mariner regrets the error and apologizes for any embarrassment it may have caused.

Water plan comments welcome at meeting

Residents will be able to review and comment on the draft Surface Water Supply Protection Plan for Lily Pond and the Aaron River Reservoir at a public meeting on Wednesday, June 19, 7:30 p.m., at the Town Hall Auditorium, 41 Highland Ave.

"We invite citizen participation in the development of this important plan," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission. "Our public drinking water supply is a precious resource that needs to be carefully protected from contamination."

The Cohasset Water Commission is preparing a Surface Water Supply Protection Plan, under a grant from the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) and the United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). The Plan is being developed by the Water Commission's watershed consultants, the Norfolk RAM Group LLC.

The Draft Plan has undergone the first round of public comment and the revised Draft Plan will be discussed one last time at this public meeting. The Final Plan will be completed and distributed by June 28.

Copies of the revised Plan are available for review at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library and at the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant.

Input sought

Dean Rizzo, executive director for the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, is encouraging all residents to vote for the type of sidewalk material and light fixtures to be used in the village improvements. Samples are displayed in the village near the gas station and a survey is also available at the site. Rizzo has received more than 200 forms but would like more.

Tiny house in legal debate

Widow wants to move next door

By Mary Ford

The owner of 457 Jerusalem Road, at right, would like to add a second floor to the one-bedroom house.

A Jerusalem Road widow would like to move from her large home into the one-bedroom house next door on a lot that she also owns.

But the small house at 457 Jerusalem Road that sits on the corner of the yard less than two feet from one of the most prestigious streets in town needs considerable upgrading. Part of the proposed upgrades would include expanding the size of the house by about 25 percent that would allow the sole bedroom to be relocated to a proposed, enlarged second floor.

"Mrs. (Barbara) Chase is finding the large house is too much and would like to live in something more manageable," her attorney James Toomey said.

Sounds simple enough.

But enter the Zoning Board of Appeals, which must consider whether to issue a special permit because the addition would expand a non-conforming use, and two lawyers — Toomey representing the homeowner, and the attorney for the neighbor across the street. The house is non-conforming because it's set back only 1.9 feet from the road and 3.4 feet from a side lot line, both far less than required under current zoning.

However, Gareth Orsmond, the attorney for the neighbor across the street – who is concerned about the expansion in height would have on water views – argued two variances could be required. The tests for variances are much steeper than those for special permits, making the zoning relief considerably harder to obtain.

Orsmond of the law firm Mackemann, Sawyer & Brewster, who is representing Ann Fitzgerald of 450 Jerusalem Road, said there is no proof the small structure at 457 Jerusalem Road – that could have been a carriage house at one time — was used as a single family home prior to 1955 when the town adopted zoning laws. It would have had to been used as such prior to that date to qualify for grandfathered status as a non-conforming use.

This brainteaser also includes an interesting wrinkle that came as a surprise to the zoning board

Orsmond says under state law, the two lots owned by Barbara Chase — 447 and 449 Jerusalem Road — have "morfed" into one lot. That's because state law says two adjacent non-conforming lots that come under common ownership automatically merge into one lot. The lots are non-conforming because they have less than the required square-footage in that residential district.

Hence, a "use" variance would also be needed because the zoning bylaw allows just one house per lot, Orsmond explained later in a telephone interview.

But Toomey of Murphy, Hesse, Toomey & Lehane, representing the applicant, said the house is positioned in such a way that it doesn't affect Fitzgerald's view at all. He warned the ZBA there would be nothing stopping Chase from tearing the existing structure down and building a new one in the center of the lot – with setbacks that conform to zoning laws.

"The (new) house could be located in the middle of the lot, plunk in the middle of the view," said Toomey, who did not buy the "morfing" argument.

There was also some discussion about why the existing structure was constructed on the corner of the lot with speculation that the topography that includes ledge made that spot likely the easiest place to build.

Also the two lots, now owned by Chase, were one parcel before they were subdivided by the prior owner in 1977. About that time, Orsmond contends the small structure was converted into a residence; soon thereafter the then owner sold off the parcel with the large house to the Chases and moved into the small house. The Chases bought the smaller lot in 1983. Then in 1985 or so, the town increased the minimum lot requirements in that district from 25,000 to 35,000 square feet. Neither of Mrs. Chase's lots now conforms so when the town adopted new minimum lot sizes for the area — the two lots would have merged into one, Orsmond said.

The Chases rented out the small house for many years but with the death of Mr. Chase, Barbara Chase wants to renovate the structure and make her home there.

What concerns Chase's neighbor Fitzgerald, Orsmond said, is the view factor and the crowding factor of having a taller building encroaching on the road. He also explained if the structure is recognized as a preexisting, nonconforming dwelling that might allow someone at a later date to make more changes.

"We're thinking of the future of the neighborhood," Orsmond said.

The zoning board considers whether changes are more detrimental to the neighborhood in its decision whether to issue a special permit.

Toomey pointed out the plans conform to height regulations, "it's just where the height is" (within the setbacks).

Zoning board members were intrigued by the debate and took the issue under advisement.

"You gentlemen have presented us with a lot of interesting homework," member Barbara Power said.

And not surprisingly, chairman Woody Chittick said he "had a lot of noodling to do."

Avalon Bay to file for permit

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Plans for the town's first large-scale apartment complex will start to make their way through town boards in July.

Michael J. Roberts, senior acquisitions director, with AvalonBay Communities, said the company expects to formally file for a comprehensive permit from the Zoning Board of Appeals in about six weeks.

AvalonBay plans to build a 254-unit luxury apartment complex at the 62-acre former Webb-Norfolk Conveyor site off Rte. 3A (across from Atlantic Bagel).

The size and scope of AvalonBay and the fact it will be built on one of the few remaining tracts of industrially zoned land in town make it controversial.

The Virginia-based developer is proposing building 23, two-to-three story wood-frame buildings with one, two- and three-bedroom units. Avalon will seek a comprehensive permit for the $43 million project under the state's "Anti-snob Zoning Act" that renders many of the town's zoning regulations inapplicable in exchange for setting aside 20-25 percent units for affordable housing.

The statute — Mass. General Laws Chapter 40B — sets a 10 percent goal of affordable housing for each community. Cohasset has about 3 percent or about 76 units of affordable housing in town.

The project with heated pool, spa, exercise facility and clubhouse is geared toward "empty-nesters" and young professionals with no kids although Avalon estimates the project would add an additional 30 schoolchildren to Cohasset. However, Superintendent of Schools Edward Malvey has gone on record saying that number could be much higher.

AvalonBay first came to town about 10 months ago and met informally with town officials at that time.

Roberts said the reason for the holdup has been determining how to handle wastewater from the site. AvalonBay had considered buying sewer capacity from the Hull Treatment Plant, but Roberts said that is now off the table because of the infrastructure needed to pipe the effluent 2-1/2 miles to Hull. Instead, Avalon plans to build an on-site sewer treatment plant. He said there's plenty of room at the site because the complex will only use about 1/3 of the acreage.

"We're at a point now that we're prepared for a comprehensive permit to be filed," Roberts said. "We've ironed out the sewer situation. We wanted to have our homework done before we proceeded."

> We wanted to have our homework done before we proceeded."
> — Michael Roberts, AvalonBay

Before Avalon files for the comprehensive permit, the company plans to notify all "the appropriate boards in town to give them plenty of lead time," he said.

He explained Avalon has gone through a lot of preliminary design analysis on the on-site sewer system and is now comfortable enough to proceed.

Market rents for the units will range from about $1,600-$2,000 per month depending on the apartment type. The affordable units will rent from $600-$1100, Roberts said.

AvalonBay has a luxury apartment complex in Hull that Cohasset residents can look at to get an idea of what type of architecture and buildings to expect. The Hull complex was not built with a comprehensive permit, however.

But AvalonBay is well versed in the process. The company about a dozen projects that are either developed or underway in the state under comprehensive permits.

"It's a process that we're very familiar with," Roberts said.

However, the project is not a "done deal" because the Zoning Board can set conditions as long as they don't hurt the economic viability of the project and the board also has the authority to deny the comprehensive permit. Avalon can appeal a denial to the state although the state expects a fairly rigorous process at the local level.

The process can be complex . The ZBA attended a course on Chapter 40B; town counsel also provided the board with a refresher on the law earlier this year. Neighboring Hingham hired consultants who are experts on the law to help its ZBA through two large projects.

The Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency has given the AvalonBay project site approval meaning the project meets the criteria for the state housing subsidy program.

Roberts said traffic issues and engineering the entrance to the site are not insurmountable and will be resolved with the town.

"The sewer technology issue took us a while to get there," he said.

Negotiations must start within 30 days of Avalon's filing for a comprehensive permit. Plans are to conduct the AvalonBay hearings in the selectmen's office which has better acoustics than the Town Hall auditorium and the room can accommodate about 30 people.

The Planning Board is concerned with the potential loss of valuable commercial property in Cohasset, which is 93 percent residentially zoned.

Of the total 384 acres zoned for commercial development in town, 171 remain undeveloped. The proposed complex would eat up 38 percent of that.

Blaze destroys antique Summer Street house

he said he doesn't know were the family is going to relocate.

"We lost everything and a lot of memories," he said.

At 2 p.m. on Tuesday, the Cohasset Fire Department received a call indicating smoke coming from the roof of the residence. Within minutes, the 911 dispatch was flooded with similar warnings. The firefighters, whose station is around the corner on Elm Street, were at the fire within minutes and soon thereafter Fire Chief Roger Lincoln sounded a second alarm. Each alarm indicates additional resources that are needed at the scene.

According to Cohasset Fire Captain Mark Trask, the rescue workers were initially in an attack mode but access to the building was extremely difficult. Trask described their initial strategy as a surgical strike, where the firefighters were attempting to douse the blaze from the inside.

However the fire, which started in the attic, had already charred the staircases that led to the highest level of the house.

"After and hour of an offensive attack we realized it wasn't working," Trask said. "We then went into a defensive mode and brought in the heavy artillery."

It was at that point that four ladder trucks surrounded the house and firefighters scaled the ladders to turn their hoses loose. Up to 5,000 gallons of water was poured into the house every minute. Trask said this was a prime example of how mutual aid, the practice of neighboring fire departments assisting one another, works.

"Without those other stations we'd still be fighting the fire," he said.

Hanover and Scituate covered Cohasset's headquarters and Scituate along with Norwell, Marshfield, Hull, Hingham provided engines and equipment at the fire. All of Cohasset's resources were deployed.

Police Chief Bob Jackson, whose department controlled the perimeter of the area to and made sure the fire department had access to the building, said the cause doesn't appear to be suspicious. At the time the Mariner went to press, the Fire Marshall was still investigating the fire.

While Trask said it was too early to estimate the damage to the house, he did say it would be significant.

The property, assessed at close to $500,000 and the house at almost $315,000, suffered serious water damage along with the heat, smoke, and fire which enveloped the house for some time.

"The main thing is that no one was hurt," said Howie Altholtz, who lives across the street. "It's just sad because they're a great family and great neighbors."

There's a new train man in town

Carroll, 38, of Quincy is no stranger to the South Shore, although he admits to not being as knowledgeable about Greenbush as many of the residents he talks to.

But Carroll should not be underestimated. He comes off four years of "community outreach" work for Cashman on the part of Boston's Central Artery-Third Harbor Tunnel project — dubbed the "Big Dig," that runs through the congested North End of Boston — with an "A," he says, for keeping the locals informed.

In fact, information is the key, says Carroll.

"My goal is not to have anyone be surprised," he says. To that end, Carroll will conduct community meetings with businesses, abutters, town officials and other interested parties — not to debate whether the train should come, but how to best mitigate construction impacts.

Carroll's office is opening in the former bowling alley building at 1580 Commercial St. in Weymouth's Jackson Square. He shares the building with representatives from the MBTA and Cashman Balfour Beatty's project designer, STV Inc.

Carroll, who has been with Cashman for 14 years, jokes he represents "everybody's bad day."

"There are certain things that come along with construction," he says. "We try to minimize those. People's lives go on and the quality of their lives should not stop because construction is going on."

The MBTA awarded the $252 million construction project to Cashman Balfour Beatty in April. As it stands now, South Shore commuters can expect to ride the 17-mile Greenbush train to work by late 2005, according to the state transportation office.

Construction, which includes an underpass in Weymouth Landing and a tunnel under Hingham Square, involves the design-build method which can help expedite a project because construction can go forward as the design unfolds in another area.

Carroll, whose wife comes from Braintree, said he's prepared for whatever questions and concerns residents and businesses along the train line want to send his way. He's already spending time getting to know the towns, including attending Hingham's Memorial Day parade with his daughter.

The Cashman office in Jackson Square is planning at barbecue at 2 p.m., June 13 (Thursday) for area businesses and residents.

As was his philosophy in the North End, Carroll won't pass the buck, so to speak.

"One thing people do not want to hear is 'it's not my fault,'" he says, adding his office will have a 24-hour-hotline available. "I will do what I can to help them with a problem.

"The residents live their lives here, pay their taxes and pay a lot for their homes," he says. "I owe them the best effort I can to address the issues."

Although actual construction is still some time off, small signs that Greenbush is coming are starting to surface. Surveyors have been walking the rail bed in Scituate and other towns, and in Hingham Square where the tunnel will be dug, special wells are being installed to determine tidal influences underground.

"We don't want people to think we're building the tunnel now," Cashman explains about the monitoring wells in Hingham Square. "But that can happen with a lack of communication."

Carroll points out that during his time in the North End, during Cashman's spot checks of the construction site for proper signage, cleanliness, aesthetics and other factors, his lowest grade was an "A-".

Unflappable, Carroll is unfazed about dealing with area communities which have fought the train. His experience working with the North End Waterfront Central Artery Committee, dubbed NEWCAC, made up of North End businesses and residents that had many demands such as limiting construction between certain hours with pre-approval, is good training, he said.

Carroll said just the way helmets and safety glasses are second nature to workers, so is making construction as least intrusive as possible to Cashman.

For example, Carroll says from his talks with Hingham Square merchants parking is a huge issue, which needs to be addressed especially if cars that now use the right of way move onto the street, reducing available parking for customers.

"At Andrew Zona Studio (on South Street), customers want to relax while they have facials, we have to see what steps we can take during construction to make sure that is still relaxing for them," he said. "The Computer Nerd has different issues.

"We're going to get everyone together to find out what their concerns are and take care of them," Carroll said.

At 10 a.m. Friday (June 14) in the St. Paul School gymnasium off Fearing Road in Hingham Square, Carroll and representatives from the MBTA will meet with Hingham residents, businesses and property owners to discuss the tunnel.

It's the first of what Carroll says will be many meetings in the months and years ahead.

"We make noise and dust for a living," he says. "But how we can do it with the least impact is what matters."

DeNiro's Keno request nixed

Not in residential area, officials say

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The idea of sanctioned gambling in residential neighborhood did not appeal to the selectmen. To that end, the board voted unanimously to object to the installation of Keno at De Niro's Restaurant on Hull Street. The selectmen had 21 days to respond to the application and the case will now go before the Massachusetts Lottery Commission, which still has the authority to allow the game.

"I don't think gambling is necessary in a residential zone," said Selectman Merle Brown. "Adding this to the neighborhood would just create more problems."

Even though De Niro's is a business, it is currently located in a residential zone because it was situated in the site before zoning laws. Its owner, Frank Plotner, said Keno would not have been a distraction.

"It would have been done very tastefully," he said. "It would have been for the convenience of our customers."

However, at least one abutter to the restaurant feared the lure of Keno could draw an excessive amount of traffic into the area. Maria Plante, a resident of Jerusalem Road, said with all of the families in the vicinity of West Corner, the game would not be appropriate.

"I strongly suggest that this application is denied," she said.

Another issue selectmen had a problem with was the proposed expansion of the restaurant. The building, which currently houses enough seats for 70 people will be before the Zoning Board of Appeals on June 17 looking for an addition of 23 seats. The plans also call for a 20-foot extension to the footprint of the building extending it further into the parking lot.

"I don't think gambling is necessary in a residential zone."

— Selectman Merle Brown

"One issue has nothing to do with the other, it's purely coincidence they're coming at the same time," said Greg Sullivan, Plotner's attorney. "Let's concentrate on the issue at hand."

Greg Sullivan estimated the game would have generated almost $2,000 worth of revenue a week for the restaurant and assured selectmen the game would be presented tastefully.

"It would be one, ten-inch screen at the bar," he said. "This operation is a matter of amusement for patrons waiting for a table."

Greg Sullivan said Plotner, who used to own Hingham Bay Club which had Keno, has demonstrated his responsibility with the game.

"He's been in the restaurant business for a long time and never given the board any reason to think he wouldn't handle this professionally," he said.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris assured Plotner that the board was not attacking his business, only his application for a gambling license.

"I think you've done a great job over there and I eat there quite frequently," she said. "I just am not in support of Keno in a residential neighborhood."

Keno, sanctioned by the lottery commission, is a game akin to Bingo. Players are given a sheet of numbers and asked to mark anywhere from one to 12 spots and can wager up to $20 on each sheet. The winning numbers are then displayed on the screen and prizes are given out based on the number of picks the player picked correctly. A new game is displayed on the Keno screen every five minutes.

Police Chief Bob Jackson said gambling could cause problems.

"The addition of Keno may increase the need for more police presence in the area in order to keep the peace," he wrote in a letter to selectmen. "For that reason I suggest the board not vote in favor of the application."

There is currently one Keno screen in town located at the Cohasset Food Mart at 3A. The gambling screen was allowed because it was set up before town boards were given the authority to object to its installation.

"If this was going to be another site set up on 3A I'd be more inclined to approve it," said Selectman Fred Koed. "But I just don't think it belongs in that neighborhood."

Sailing club cruises into season

The children's program for the Cohasset Sailing Club opens its 42nd season on June 27 with tremendous momentum.

"We have re-engineered the curriculum and carefully chosen our instructors," says Sandy Crough, vice commodore responsible for children's sailing.

The instructor lineup reflects much experience in sailing instruction.

The instructor lineup reflects much experience in sailing instruction. Long-time Cohasset teacher Torin Sweeney will oversee the instructors. According to Sweeney, many of the staff are veterans with excellent sailing backgrounds. Matt McLaughlin will be head Instructor.

This year's flagship group, the Master's Class, has more than quadrupled in size over last year's. Commodore Bob Deutsch attributes this increase to an energized level of volunteerism among the members, upgraded equipment, staff stability, and greater organizational visibility.

He also cited five members in particular who aided Crough during the winter months in planning the season's activities. Tom and Dianne Shipp surveyed the entire membership to find out how the program could become more user friendly. Ann Musto assisted in the time-consuming hiring process. Emily Malone contributed her extensive instructional background to revisions in the curriculum. Lucia Flibotte organized the planning for special events.

Fifth-grader to take the stage

Festival encourages many young artists

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Ana Buckley is hardly nervous about her upcoming gig and why should she be? She's been playing the guitar for four years and singing since she was just a toddler.

But for Ana that was not too long ago.

The Deer Hill fifth-grade student will perform seven songs in her half-hour time slot on Saturday during the South Shore Arts Center Festival on the Common. Ana, who created a tape of her songs when she was in second grade, likes listening to folk music and her selections reflect her interest. She said being on stage is not as easy as she has once imagined.

"Sometimes it's hard because I'm concentrating too much on singing or playing and not on both," she said.

The already accomplished musician has performed at various other functions including the North River Arts Festival in Marshfield and at the Hingham Newcomer's Club.

"I get nervous when I'm on stage," she admitted. "But that's why I practice so much."

The 11-year-old has four guitars, including an ukulele, and is currently trying to play a steel-string guitar rather than the softer nylon-strung guitars she normally strums. Steel-string guitars project louder than their nylon counterparts but tend to be harder on the fingers.

Ana, who also plays the trombone in the school band, said she enjoys both singing and playing the guitar but it's the latter she most enjoys.

"Nobody I know really plays the guitar," she said. "It's special to know I have a talent."

Ana's teacher, Joe Armstrong, has been asking her to writer her own material and Ana said she's attempting her hand at poetry.

Her mother, Emilia Buckley, said she encouraged all of her children to play an instrument.

"It's a different kind of education for them," she said. "I think it's important to be musical."

Along with Ana's concert, there will be many children featured at the festival. Mary Foley, who has coordinated the Young Artists' Exhibition for six years, is once again organizing the event.

She agrees with Emilia on the importance of art for children.

"It helps creatively," she said. "In the last few years there has been so many cut backs in art departments but the festival is a way for students to continue to express themselves."

Ana Buckley, who will be on stage this weekend at the Festival on the Common, practices on her guitar.

Foley continued to say that when children see their art hung on a wall it provides them with a sense of accomplishment.

To get all the artwork, Foley contacts the schools in the South Shore and asks for students' artwork.

"The students can submit anything they want," she said. "We get everything from crayon drawings to oil paintings."

All of the art work will be displayed in its own tent which will be up the entire festival. Foley said the young artist tent is one of the biggest attractions at the event.

"It's just awesome," she said. "It's very colorful and always gets a great response."

Foley anticipates receiving hundreds of submissions this year and she said it will be difficult to determine the award winners. The prizes are distributed by age group.

The South Shore Art Center Art Festival will be held all weekend on the common. On Friday, June 14, the festival will be open from 2 - 7 p.m., on Saturday it will be open from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m., and on Sunday, its final day it will be running from noon - 6 p.m.

The festival will feature more than 80 juried craft and fine artists on the common, a young artists' show, kids' art activities, a performance stage, artist demonstrations and free parking and trolley service from the South Shore Music Circus.

Upset over band teacher's leaving

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

With the Cohasset senior class graduating last weekend there was cause for celebration all over town.

However, the mood was starkly different at last week's School Committee meeting where several angry students voiced their displeasure with the administration's decision not to keep a popular teacher.

Principal Michael Jones said Greg Lessard's contract is not being renewed. He was the full-time band director.

A handful of students showed up at the meeting and two read letters they had written to both the School Committee and Jones.

"Not only have you overlooked Mr. Lessard's accomplishments, but you have also overlooked his ability to connect with the students in the program," wrote Andrew Jerz, a student at the high school. "Mr. Lessard has done more for the music program for both the middle and high school in the last two years than what has been accomplished over quite some time."

Lessard, in his second year with the school, was a provisional teacher meaning his contract was renewed on a yearly basis. This is the practice with all the teachers in the school until they reach their fourth year in Cohasset and achieve a professional status.

According to Jones, at that point it is more difficult to let a teacher go.

"The standard is much different for provisional and professional teachers," Jones said.

Jones added he didn't want to specifically talk about Lessard's situation but wanted to assure the school community the music program will not suffer because of this decision.

"We are very committed to both the band and the music program as a whole," Jones said. "It will not disappear."

However, there have been rumors circulating around town that because of the MCAS, a test which emphasizes students knowledge in math, science and English — the art department took a hit.

"We are very committed to both the band and the music program as a whole. It will not disappear."
— Principal Michael Jones

Eric Oddleifson, who plays with the Rusty Skippers and was part of the Memorial Day celebration in which Lessard led the band, feels the school district has treated the its music department terribly.

"The principal has shown us were his priorities are," he said. "The school finally has a solid music program and it's going to be thrown into disarray again."

However, Jones said that's not the case. He's been actively pursuing Lessard's replacement and the position will continue to be full-time. Jones, whose daughter was a music major at Boston University, said the goal is to improve the program.

"I appreciate very much what Lessard did for our program and wish him the best of luck," Jones said. "We're just going to move in a different direction."

All the students at the School Committee meeting detailed Lessard's commitment to the music program. Lessard has reinstated the pep band at the school which plays at the Skippers football games. The band also played in the Memorial Day Parade, and was the only group representing the school on the day. Lessard also led the middle school band to a music festival in New Hampshire, where it received an "Excellent" ranking. One year later, Lessard led the high school band to a first-place trophy at the all-star festival in New York.

"Most importantly, Mr. Lessard helped us grow as students, as band members and as individuals," wrote a concerned student. "This is not only because he is good at what he does but because he really cares about what he does and not all teachers today care about their class in such a way Mr. Lessard does."

School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn thanked the students for coming but said it was outside the board's jurisdiction. The School Committee is mostly a policy setting board and, apart from hiring the superintendent, is not involved with decisions over whether to retain teachers.

"We strongly support all of the programs at the schools," Flynn said. "We have faith in our administration and while the decisions they make may not always be the popular ones, we support them 100 percent."

Bryan Marks, the choral director for the school and teacher in Cohasset for 25 years, said Lessard was one of the best teachers he has ever worked with. Marks said Lessard was well respected by his colleagues and adored by the students.

"We're losing a really great teacher," Marks said. "Our loss is someone else's substantial gain."

Marks continued to say one of his biggest concerns is the current state of the music program. The school has had four different band directors in the past four years and he's worried the position won't be easy to fill.

"It's kind of like a used car," Marks said. "It could be the best car in the world but if it's had four different owners in four years it's going to be hard to convince someone to buy it again."

William McArthur, a senior at the school, agreed with Marks and felt finding Lessard's replacement will prove very difficult.

"I challenge you to find another instructor with the heart, drive, and determination of Greg Lessard, who will sacrifice so much to see his program, school and students excel," wrote McArthur in a letter to the School Committee. "In all my years in the Cohasset band program I have never witnessed a teacher who could install the confidence and bring out the talent of his students or was so liked by them."

Lessard was not available for comment.

Vietnam, Korea veterans memorials are planned

The Veterans Memorial Committee announced it has begun planning for a Korean and Vietnam Memorial. The memorial will be at Veterans Park, Cohasset Harbor. Veterans Park was dedicated in the mid-1960s at the height of the Vietnam War.

The committee added the first memorial wall in 1970 remembering the men who gave their lives in the wars of the 20th-century. Recently, memorial walls have been constructed listing all those from Cohasset who served during World War I, World War II, and panels have been prepared for the names of the 199 Cohasset men who served in the Civil War.

The committee plans to design the new memorial to enhance the beauty of the park on the harbor, said Chairman Glenn A. Pratt. The Korea-Vietnam Memorial will have the names of all those Cohasset men and women who served. Nearly 175 served during the Korean War—America's Forgotten War—all but one returned. The number who served in America's longest war, Vietnam, is expected to approach the 435 who served in World War II. Cohasset sacrificed eight of its young men during the Vietnam conflict—five in 1969 alone.

Work on assembling the names of all who served will be time consuming and require input from the community, according to Pratt. Records kept by the state appear to be very accurate for Korea; original documents are on file at the military records center in Boston. Records for the Vietnam years are incomplete at the state records center, Pratt said. The committee plans a number of efforts over the next few months to solicit information from the community to compile a complete list of those who served.

Conceptual design work is expected to be completed this year and a funding request will be present at the 2003 town meeting.

WWI memorial on the common

Now that the Veterans Committee has completed the new World War I Memorial in the Cove, selectmen are considering removing the temporary World War I Memorial on the common.

Selectmen welcome any public input on this matter before they take action. Should selectmen decide to remove it, the memorial will be archived and stored in an appropriate facility.

Interested citizens can share their comments by mail to the Selectmen's Office, Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., or by calling 781-383-4105.

Some town employees may get chance to retire soon

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

It is everyone's dream to retire at an early age and for some town employees, it may become a reality. The board of selectmen is debating adopting an early retirement incentive that would allow qualified employees to step down.

The law, which was recently signed by the governor, gives people the ability to add 5 years of age or 5 years of service to their length of service, or a combination of the two.

> "This needs to be looked at very closely."
> — Mark Haddad, Town Manager

This would help employees reach the maximum pension of 80 percent of their pay and to do that, an employee must be at least 55-years-old and have been working for at least 30 years. For example, an employee who is 53 with 27 years service, could add two years to their age and, three years to their service to qualify. (For how it would affect specific workers see sidebar).

The board needs to decide whether to adopt this statute in Cohasset by June 30 and will need to determine which employees it will offer the incentive to by Dec. 31, 2002 because after that, the program is no longer valid. The board has total discretionary power over the incentive.

The law states, "the executive authority in a town (the selectmen) may limit the amount of additional credit for service or age or a combination of both. It may limit the total number of employees for whom it will approve a retirement calculated under this act."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the board has some work to do.

"This needs to be looked at very closely," he said.

The program would apply to the Class 1 and the Class 4 employees of the town. Class 1 workers are public work employees such as Haddad and clerical staff. Class 4 employees are safety officials, like police and firefighters. There are no Class 2 or 3 employees in Cohasset.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan felt the board needed to identify its priorities.

"We need to look at what the value and cost of changing the workforce would be," he said. "Because that's what we're really talking about here."

Haddad said the benefit to the town would be two fold. It would be a way to let people leave in a beneficial manner to the employee, and a way to incorporate a different set of skills in town. For example, a tenured firefighter could take advantage of this program and a paramedic could take his or her place. However, Haddad said he is still ambivalent about the program.

"Until I see the finaancial impact of this program I can't offer a firm opinion on it," he said. "If we can improve the workforce then it's probably a good thing, if it is a financial burden to the town it's obviously not."

Michael Buckley, the town accountant, said he thinks this is something to town should look into. He said he would recommend offering the incentive to from 1 to 3 employees.

"If the board wanted to change the workforce then this is a good program," he said.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said she would like to see more information on the subject before she makes a decision.

"We need a detailed memo on this explaining exactly what the benefits and drawbacks would be with each employee," she said.

Haddad the board must make a decision by June 30.

The impact of the early retirement incentive on five actual employees who are eligible for the program.

	Employee A	Employee B	Employee C	Employee D	Employee E
Average Salary	$27,000	$55,000	$43,000	$53,000	$44,500
Current Rate	58%	70%	65%	68%	64%
Current Pension	$15,651	$38,500	$28, 159	$36,069	$28,492
New Rate	75%	80%	78%	80%	77%
New Pension	$20,255	$44,000	$33,541	$42,472	$34,280
Impact on the town	$4,604 $5,500	$5,382 $6,403	$5,788

Editors note...the current rate refers to the current percentage of a pension plan an employee has earned and correlates with the dollar amount of their current pension. The new rate refers to the percentage of the pension plan an employee would be eligible for if enrolled in the early retirement incentive program and correlates to the dollar amount in the new pension..

Zoning proposals sought by July 8

The Zoning Advisory Committee (ZAC) will accept proposed zoning amendments for analysis and recommendation to the Planning Board until July 8. Please submit a brief description of your zoning change and/or draft language by fax 781-383-7087; email: ebhtownplanner@aol.com; or mail to the Planning Board at Town Hall.

The purpose of the ZAC is to study and report periodically to the Planning Board to recommend updates to the zoning bylaw and zoning map. Given the level of interest from various boards, commissions and individuals regarding possible zoning changes, the ZAC will place an annual call for zoning proposals. A submission deadline several months in advance of town meeting enables the ZAC adequate time to provide thoughtful recommendations to the Planning Board for possible town meeting action.

The ZAC is an ad-hoc committee of the Planning Board consisting of the following members: Al Moore, Planning Board; Ben Lacy, Zoning Board;; Merle Brown, Board of Selectmen; Veneta Roebuck, Conservation Commission; Rich Henderson, Citizen Member; Mark DeGiacomo, Citizen Member; Liz Harrington, Town Planner; and Bob Egan, Building Commissioner.

OPINION

Welcome to the neighborhood

Old habits are hard to break. We've been writing about Greenbush and the MBTA, and key players from state secretaries to T spokesmen, for so long in the same paragraph that it's going to feel a little awkward getting used to some new names.

The new "train" guy on the block is Tom Carroll. He comes to town with 14 years with his company Cashman Construction, which has partnered with Balfour Beatty to build the train.. Most recently Mr. Carroll served as the community liaison for Cashman in the North End, where the Big Dig has had a major impact.

Those are good credentials – ones he'll need in dealing with the anti-train folk along the rail line.

In an interview last week, we tried to warn Mr. Carroll that despite successfully dealing with neighbors and businesses in one of Boston's oldest and most charming neighborhoods – he ain't seen nothing yet. After a drive through Boston, not many motorists would oppose the Central Artery-Third Harbor Tunnel project. The Big Dig has its problems, but the alternative of doing nothing isn't an option.

There's no such case with Greenbush., which some say is the worst alternative for the traffic snarled South Shore. Unfortunately, in our view, too many area residents are still committed to opposing to the project, including our two legislators. They are holding on to the belief that a combination of boats and buses can end our traffic nightmare.

So to Greenbush opponents, Mr. Carroll not only represents "dust and disruption" he is also a clear sign the "awful" train might actually come.

Nevertheless we give Cashman Construction high marks for sending Mr. Carroll, who is going to be on-site and available for all questions and concerns related to construction. He says he's a good listener and will do his best to mitigate the intrusion that train construction is going to mean. His office will have a 24-hour-hotline and promises to respond to all calls.

Even though actual construction is a ways off, Cashman is wasting no time.

Today, there's an open house at the new regional office at 1058 Commercial St. in Weymouth's Jackson Square.

And at 10 a.m. Friday is the first of what is promised to be many meetings with local citizens, town officials, businesses and other interested parties when tunnel construction will be discussed at St. Paul's School.

The unflappable Mr. Carroll is both congenial and laid back – useful traits as he opens the Greenbush chapter of his career.

There's also a good chance he'll be able to make all our lives easier when the backhoes and construction trucks come to town.

Mutual aid

"Mutual aid" have to be two of the most beautiful words in the English language.

There was a move afoot about 10 years ago to develop regional fire protection service. After many months, a study was generated, one that is no doubt sitting on a shelf somewhere in one of the area towns. Changing the culture of having local fire service here in parochial Massachusetts was not something likely to occur.

But Tuesday when dozens of firefighters from several towns fought a four-alarm blaze here in Cohasset, it was clear that mutual aid, which provides backup for our local police and fire departments, works well. The extended ladders from four aerial ladder trucks were a wonder to behold.

It may not be perfect, but mutual aid allows our towns to maintain their own fire and police departments while at the same time getting help from outside when needed. Mutual aid provided invaluable help Tuesday, and we're grateful to all the firefighters and fire departments that pitched in.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Setting the record straight

TO THE EDITOR:

In response to Mr. and Mrs. Karps' letter, I would like to set the record straight. The Red Lion Inn, before reconstruction, was a structure which had been run down beyond repair. The barn has a legal capacity of 340 people. Except one fund-raiser, most functions in the barn during the last 12 months have been between 125 and 180 persons. On the insistence of the town, the Red Lion Inn has provided more parking spaces on its own property. The employees work day or evening shifts so that there are never more than 40 percent of the staff at the inn at one time.

The inn has accommodated the Karps in every possible way, building a fence, planting trees, and installing sound-measurement systems. The inn has also helped to revitalize the town and has contributed $50,000 to the Revitalization Corporation, a $10,000 Cohasset High School Scholarship and another $50,000 toward the construction of the Little League Baseball field. The inn has been a good "Cohasset citizen."

The proposed addition of 34 rooms is for wedding guests who are on the property anyway. The underground garage requires practically no blasting. The landfill, which was deposited there from the original construction, has to be removed again. The neighbors should welcome this because there would be fewer cars leaving, the guest are staying on the property and the business community will benefit as well.

We're getting many compliments about the tasteful design and structure of the inn. We will try to accommodate our neighbors and the citizens of Cohasset.

We employ many Cohasset residents and now many of those families' children. However, there are a few who will never agree with needed changes although they bought property adjacent to a business zone.

We would also like the parents, employees and in general, the silent majority, to attend future meetings.

Michael Hayes, President
Red Lion Inn

Public safety on sidewalks

Mr. Mark Haddad, Town Manager
Chief Robert Jackson, Chief of Police

I am very concerned about a public safety issue for all Cohasset residents. By allowing cars to parallel park over sidewalks, pedestrians, strollers, young bikers, wheelchairs, and runners are forced to walk into busy town streets to pass these vehicles. I recognize that Cohasset is short on parking spaces, however, by allowing vehicles to block sidewalks the town is compromising the safety of our citizens.

Please don't allow an accident to happen before the laws, which are intended to protect our citizens, are properly enforce.

Kari O'Donnell
11 Beach St.

Band teacher should stay

TO THE EDITOR:

My classmates and I have learned that the Middle/High School Band Teacher, Mr. Lessard will no longer be the band teacher next year. The reason that his contract is not being renewed is because he is against the idea of the band rehearsing after school rather than during the school day. He feels that by having the rehearsals after school it would be the death of the band.

The Cohasset School Band does not want Mr. Lessard to be let go because we believe that he is an amazing band teacher and has really brought the band together. We respectfully disagree with the School Board and the Superintendent and request that they reconsider. If band is after school, it will compete with other activities, such as sports.

We really enjoy playing our instruments and like the idea of it being scheduled into our day rather than having it compete with other activities. Some of us have already started signing petitions in Mr. Lessard's support. We are hoping that this can be changed and we students (that this decision now affects) have a voice in this matter.

We, the band don't want to lose the best band teacher that Cohasset Middle/High School has seen in a long time.

Relay For Life

TO THE EDITOR:

As Regional Executive for the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life in Cohasset this year, I would like to thank the people of Cohasset and the surrounding towns for their continued generosity and support. Relay For Life brought together teams of families, friends, students, churches, neighborhoods and businesses all with the same goal of curing cancer in the new millennium. We have raised more than $133,000 to date, to help the American Cancer Society fund research, education, information and guidance to cancer patients, advocacy and patient service programs such as transportation to treatment and one-on-one support for women with breast cancer.

I would also like to congratulate the planning committee for working so diligently to make this year's event a tremendous success. Their incredible support and determination proves we can make a difference in the fight against cancer when we work together.

Although cancer continues to touch so many lives, Relay For Life is an emphatic statement of our hope that this disease will one day be conquered. The rain may have ended our event early, but it could not dampen the spirit that is Relay For Life.

Lamp posts

TO THE EDITOR:

One can get an idea of the suitability of black iron lamp posts that look something like Victorian gas lights by visiting the business district of Hingham.

We don't need to emulate Hingham, of course, but it is worth noting that it is slightly older than Cohasset, has many more "period" buildings, and strong views about preservation and historic authenticity.

Because Cohasset is not a museum dedicated to replicating or preserving any particular era, and already is a smorgasbord of styles, surely our best course is to pick lights that are effective and attractive. Most lamp post styles are unappealing and seem intended to light gas stations; the attractive ones are patterned after classics of the past (e.g. Victorian gas lamps).

Furniture sale

The Cohasset School Department will conduct a sale of various furnishings at both the Deer Hill School and the Middle/High School on Saturday, June 22 between the hours of 8 and 11 a.m. Items available for sale include, student desks, teachers' desks, tables and cabinets. All items are cash-and-carry as there will be no items stored on site. Proceeds from the sale of this furnishing will be used to offset the debt service for the school construction project. HEALTH NOTES

Students report on water quality issues

By Steve Bobo

SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

This year on May 23 at the Lightkeepers building on the waterfront, students made a formal presentation to the Board of Health of the work they had done over the last several years. The work was funded by grants, from various sources, and not from the school budget.

The first grant was given in 1999 by the DEP's office of volunteer support, and was, for the most part, turned over to the high school to fund volunteer activities in Dave Magnusen's science department which included work by biology teacher Patty McGrail, and kids who joined Jack Buckley's new Maritime Institute. The work the kids did, beginning in the summer of 1998 was to assess water quality issues in town.

First, in support of Camp Dresser & McKee's town-

The student volunteers' reports have been or will be used by Cohasset in grant requests totaling $150,000.

funded, water quality study of Little Harbor, and later in assessment of the impact of additional fresh water entering Cohasset Cove and its effect on the lobster population in the harbor. The reports were titled "Testing Levels of Fecal Coliform at Cat Dam," Kelly Stone, May 2002, and Salinity and "Dissolved Oxygen Study Cohasset Harbor Summer, 2001," Charlie Anderson, Jesse Brewer, Matthew Davis, Ross Leib-Lappin.

Future work is being funded by grants from other sources including MIT, Massachusetts Coastal Zone Management Department, etc. According to Steve Ivas, an environmental activist chairman of Norwell's Water Commission and one of the 30 or so attendees, the work represented college-level quality. Copies of these reports are available at the Board of Health.

As students become more proficient in their monitoring efforts, the quality of their work improves and becomes more reliable. The student volunteers' reports have been or will be used by Cohasset in grant requests totaling $150,000. If these grants are received, it will be in large part because of Cohasset's student volunteer program.

Use of volunteers has become a part of a town strategy to deflect the DEP assessment of Cohasset as non-responsive to environmental concerns. We have a letter from Dave Ferris of the DEP, the state's overseer of environmental issues within the town, so stating. The student volunteer effort has now become embedded in the curriculum of the school system and benefits the town, the students and teachers without touching town tax revenues.

The student volunteer program under high school auspices provides several major benefits to the town without even considering obvious benefits to students: First there will be reduced funding pressure on the school system to provide science (chemical and biological environmental) electives, since funding for such volunteer programs comes from grants and other sources. Teachers have a venue within town with which to obtain summer continuing education and other career incentives, and the town receives data of vital importance to maintaining its state-mandated environmental goals. These benefits are available through a self-sustaining organism with our requiring support from tax revenues.

For the future, the town plans assessments of water-quality improvement in all of its estuaries including the Gulf, (nutrients and fecal coliform) main harbor (salinity), Little Harbor (fecal coliform, dissolved oxygen, DO, and nutrients), and Straits Pond (salinity, DO, flushing studies, bathymetry). We will not be able to accomplish this program without support from highly skilled and properly trained volunteer monitors which the town's school system provides.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

Straight scoop on the state budget

YOUR REP

GARRETT BRADLEY

I believe we should have started the process by looking for ways to eliminate waste wherever possible

As the budget process in the House of Representatives draws to a close, I want to provide you with an update on the Commonwealth's fiscal situation and how it will impact our local schools, public safety and town services.

Massachusetts faces a $2 billion budget deficit. If you have been watching the debate about tax increases and budget cuts, you may share my frustration with the knee-jerk reaction of the legislature to increase taxes without looking at other options to raise revenue. Let me be clear at the start: I did not support the House tax package which included, among other things, freezing the tax roll back. The residents of Massachusetts voted overwhelmingly for the tax cut, and just as I have supported the Clean Elections law for the same reason, I will not override the will of the voters and their clear intentions on these issues.

Instead, I supported a mix of budget cuts and targeted increases in revenue. With a $21.8 billion budget that has doubled within the last 10 years, I believe we should have started the process by looking for ways to eliminate waste wherever possible. I sponsored a plan that would have generated over $1 billion to help close the budget gap and protect our local schools, public safety, and town services without raising arbitrary taxes. This plan would have utilized the unused portion of this year's tobacco fund settlement, provided more local aid by reducing the payouts from the Lottery, implemented a tax amnesty program for the state to secure delinquent taxes, and explored placing video gaming machines at the state's four existing race tracks. These solutions would have closed the budget gap without breaking our promise to the voters to reduce the income tax.

Unfortunately, a majority of representatives chose a different option. I want you to know that I fought hard for my plan and that I will continue to work hard to keep taxes low while providing essential services. I will also continue to ensure that our district has a strong, independent voice fighting for our interests on Beacon Hill. Toward that goal, I was able to help increase funds for the school building assistance program, public education, law enforcement and local aid. This means that our communities, while still making some cuts, will have the resources they need to continue to provide quality services for all residents.

Since being elected in 2000, I have worked hard to make sure that the communities of Cohasset, Hingham, and Hull have a strong advocate in the State Legislature. With the addition of a portion of Scituate to the district in 2003, I look forward to continuing to work with local residents and community leaders to improve the quality of life in our communities.

State Representative Garrett Bradley represents the Third Plymouth District.

Ted LeClair draws a crowd

More than 450 South Shore residents and elected officials filled the Elks Lodge in Weymouth last week to help Democrat Ted LeClair kick-off his campaign for the Plymouth-Norfolk District of the Massachusetts State Senate.

"I believe that we can do more to help educate our kids, I believe that we can do more to provide quality health care, I believe that we can do more to improve our economy and improve the quality of our public transportation, and most importantly I believe – very passionately – that we can do more to improve the trust all of you have in our government," LeClair told the crowd. "That is why I am running and that is what keeps me going every day: to every meeting, to every door, to every phone call."

LeClair will face incumbent state Sen. Bob Hedlund, R-Weymouth, in November's election.

Palmer kickoff party includes fireworks

Nathaniel Palmer, candidate for State Representative for the Third Plymouth district, announces the official campaign launch party on Saturday, June 29, from 5-8p.m., at the Hingham Community Center on 70 South St. in Hingham.

"After several successful rallies this month, our message is really resonating within our district," Palmer says. "The voters of the South Shore know that it's time for a change, and on the 29th we will show our district that change is here!"

Senator Bob Hedlund, the ranking Republican for the South Shore whose district includes Palmer's Third Plymouth, will serve as the event's emcee. Other honored guests will include former state Representative Mary Jeanette Murray, Republican State Party Vice Chairwoman Polly Logan, and several elected officials from the towns of Hingham, Hull, Cohasset and Scituate.

Immediately following the event, participants will attend the Hingham 4th of July Fireworks Celebration over Hingham Harbor. For more information about the event contact Mary Anne McKenna (781-749-5004), or Julie Guild (781-383-6443).

Vineyard tried to leave state

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The Vineyard Gazette, that weekly record of life on Martha's Vineyard, reminds us that this is the 25th anniversary of the last time the Vineyard and Nantucket tried to secede from Massachusetts.

I say it's the last time because the restless population of thrifty Yankees seems to have tried several times before to escape the free-spending pols who inhabit the state Legislature in faraway Boston.

Perhaps it's a good time to raise the flag of secession in these days of multi-billion dollar deficits and legislators who view the will of the people as expressed in referenda at the ballot box as something to be ignored.

The gripe among the islanders 25 years ago was that, in trimming the House of Representatives from 240 to 160 members, the Legislature was lumping the men and women of the islands and off-islanders from the outer Cape towns together with one state rep.

The islands had each been guaranteed a representative of its own since 1692, when the islands seceded from New York.

The movement began when the Vineyard's All Island Selectmen's Association voted to withdraw from Massachusetts and form the 51st state. They also invited Nantucket to join them.

They even set up a ruling civilian junta — "until free elections can be held" — consisting of selectmen from Oak Bluffs (which got two), Chilmark, Edgartown, and West Tisbury.

And a cabinet made up of secretaries of state, defense, labor, interior, navy, agriculture, and health, education and welfare. A secretary of the treasury was not thought to be necessary, but it turned out to be more necessary than defense.

The first letter offering financial support and a check for $1 came from a Hingham man.

"Here's my donation to help you get started," he wrote. "Please feel free to contact me if you start selling national bonds. P.S. — If you don't secede from the state, please send my check back."

The secessionist movement soon had a support group, the Martha's Vineyard Statehood Support Committee "to draw attention to the gerrymandering disaster which has linked Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket with the outer arm of Cape Cod."

And a flag of its own was unfurled in the Hall of Flags at the State House — a white gull in flight against an orange sun, all on a field of deep blue. A Declaration of Independence was read at a State House press conference.

A neighboring state smelled an opportunity. Gov. Meldrum Thompson of New Hampshire, with 400 members of its House, wired the selectmen of Nantucket and Chilmark:

"New Hampshire stands ready to begin negotiations immediately to provide the benefits of our excellent tax climate (no sales or income tax) and seven representatives in our House. I am prepared to meet with your officials in your town or at our State House in Concord."

Gov. Richard Snelling of Vermont appointed a special ambassador to visit the islands and discuss possible annexation. Gov. Ella Grasso of Connecticut also put in a bid, but she wasn't serious.

"At first everyone thought of it as a lark," said an aide to Gov. Michael Dukakis.

They changed their tune when the results of a referendum came in from Nantucket. It was 1,725 for secession, 32 votes against.

Eventually, cooler legislative heads prevailed, and Martha's Vineyard remained in Massachusetts just in time to entertain Bill, Hillary, Chelsea, and all the gang.

LIBRARY CORNER

Summer reading

"A Star*Spangled*Summer* at Your Library" is this year's statewide summer reading program. Registration will be held at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library in the Children's Room beginning the week of June 30. Registration hours will be from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Mondays, Thursdays and Fridays; and from 1-8 p.m. on Tuesdays.

At the time of registration, adults will [illegible] to be given a summer reading [illegible] to record their summer reading. Throughout the summer, people should bring their logs to the library to be stamped. At the completion of the summer program, we will have a celebration and a "Star Spangled" T-shirt will be awarded to those participants who met or exceeded their goals.

The library will present a series of free Tuesday evening programs for families and children of all ages. The events will begin on Tuesday, July 9 and will end on Tuesday, Aug. 13.

Families that read together provide the strongest model for future readers. Research has shown that young children from families that visit the library at least monthly show significantly more signs of emerging literacy than children whose families aren't library users.

For more information, call Sharon, the children's librarian at 781-383-1348.

CHS grads look to future

embracing the challenges ahead.

Robin Murphy, the president of the class, spoke to his peers about the future.

"Even though we are leaving behind both memories and friends we have the rest of our lives in front of us," he said. "In a few years we will be the generation entrusted with power."

Referring to a line from the recently released Spiderman movie in which the antagonist assured Spiderman that with great power comes great responsibility, Murphy encouraged his class to follow their dreams.

"It's been such a pleasure to walk the halls of CHS with all of you," he said. "You all better show up for the reunion."

Supt. Edward Malvey followed Murphy and said in the wake of Sept. 11, the class is heading to an uncertain world.

"We are sending you off into a world we can't control," he said. "We have faith that you can change that world and make it safer. We wish you only the best, a safe life, a safe journey, and that your dreams come true."

Megan McCain, the salutatorian of the class, joined the school in her sophomore year after moving from the midwest. She spoke of how difficult it can be to be uprooted and replanted in a different location.

"It's been such a pleasure to walk the halls of CHS with all of you. You all better show up for the reunion."

— Robin Murphy, class president

"We all need to keep an open mind and keep our thoughts positive as we move on," she said. "Change can be scary but it's something we should embrace."

Katharine Grimm, the valedictorian, said her class emerged as a talented and creative group of individuals. She continued by saying the senior class of 2002 has shown maturity and the ability to work together which will serve them well in the future.

"As we move into the next phase of our life we may feel unprepared," she said. "But we all received a strong foundation from this school which should serve us well. Let us be motivated by the challenges ahead."

Along with the students, four teachers, who are retiring from the district, were recognized. They were asked to join the graduating class as a recognition of their contributions to the lives of the students and for inspiring and enriching the children of Cohasset.

Susan Bauch, a teacher at the Osgood school for 33 years was honored along with Larry Shultz who has worked at Deer Hill since 1967. Paul Hogan, who began teaching mathematics at the high school in 1967 and coached basketball, and Joseph Federico who started to teach in 1968 and instituted the Spanish advanced placement course at the high school in the 70s and has been the only teacher of the course since were also honored.

"We express our heartfelt thanks to these four teachers and wish them Godspeed in all their future endeavors," Jones said.

Girls tennis team expected to improve on this year's semifinal run

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

When the girls tennis program qualifies for post-season play in 11 consecutive seasons and works its way to the Sectional Semi-finals for the past two, it becomes hard not to expect great things.

Indeed, it's almost difficult not to imagine next year's team improving on their Southeastern Massachusetts Final Four finish, and possibly even make a run at a state title.

"The semis was the furthest we had ever gone as a team," noted coach Sarah Meehan, who has been at the helm of the team for all 11 of its playoff appearances. "But we certainly have the team to do it (win a state title)."

The only loss to graduation for the team will be the sad departure of senior captain Kelly Stone, a force for the second doubles team this year. Stone, one of the few CHS athletes left who can claim six full varsity seasons of any sport, closed out her fine career with her best season, getting named to the South Shore League all-star team with her sophomore partner Courtney Caron.

After Stone, this team will remain

With full cast returning, boys tennis squad eyes SSL crown in '03

All signs are pointing up for the Cohasset High boys tennis program.

After an 8-6 regular season campaign that landed the squad in the South Sectional tournament for the second straight year, the Skippers now stand in a position where the team can only get better and their schedule can only get easier.

The benefit of not having any seniors on the squad is that all nine players should return with a good deal of varsity experience. One thing that hurt the squad all throughout the 2002 season was the abundance of rookies — seven to be exact.

However, the Skippers should be loaded up with upperclassmen next year, with at least four seniors and five juniors. A few more may also come out for the team after converting from a different spring sport, something that happened with four starters on this year's team.

The seniors for next year's team, all of whom started this year, will be Ross Lieb-Lappen, Scott Faber, Bryan Bilton and David Ingber.

Same old, same old...darn it!

Cohasset Falls to Hingham in D2 Quarterfinals

The Cohasset boys' varsity lacrosse team finished its season in the same place 2001 had concluded: the home field of the Hingham Harbormen.

This time around, the Skippers bowed out in the state Division 2 quarterfinals, losing to the defending state champs 12-5. With the loss, Cohasset – which entered the tourney as the 12th seed despite being the 2001 finalist – finishes at 15-8, with an upset of fifth-seeded Norwell in the second round standing as the season's highlight.

"This was an up and down year for us," said head coach Kevin Orcutt. "We lost some close games, and struggled through several injuries to key players. But we hung together pretty well, and saved our best for last with our win against Norwell. Our seniors can feel very proud of the past two years and the legacy those seasons represent."

Against Hingham, the Skippers never got untracked. The Harbormen scored twice in the first three minutes, and led 6-0 at the end of the first quarter. By the time senior midfielder Pete Whoriskey collected a feed from junior Matt Davis and whipped the ball by Hingham goalie Nate Hammond, there were less than three minutes left in the half, and Cohasset was trailing 8-0.

"We played Hingham three times this year," said Orcutt, "and each time they'd improved offensively over the previous game. Their speed and ball skills are outstanding, and Conor Fitzgerald is a great playmaker. I'm just glad we won't see him, Petrick Lenhart and Greg Sowyrda again."

Hingham graduating three superstars is just one good piece of news for the 2003 team.

"Next year, eastern Massachusetts will go to three divisions for tournament play," reported Orcutt. "I'm not sure how it'll break down exactly, but Hingham will stay in D2, while we, and most likely Norwell, will drop to D3. If Duxbury stays in D1, it'll be a situation where the Pilgrim Conference will have leading contenders for all three state titles."

The Skippers fared better in the Hard driven

Cohasset's Brown ultra-motivated to succeed at next level

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Jason Brown will be joining some pretty select company tomorrow night when he takes to the football field at Bentley College for the annual Massachusetts school boy North-South Shrine Football Classic.

Only two Cohasset High gridders have ever taken part in the state's premier high school football showcase, and number one came 16 years ago in the person of Bob Durkin.

"I've been really excited since they contacted me," said Jason, who graduated from Cohasset High on Saturday. "It's a great honor for me and Cohasset High, and it's a great opportunity for me too."

Folks will have to forgive Jason for seeming, at least at this time, a little more focussed on the second portion of that equation.

Jason has dreamed of playing major college football for as far back as he can recall, and he is fully aware that this game could be a big step on the path to realizing that dream.

Jason was arguably the key figure in leading Cohasset High to a 9-1 season and the South Shore League championship this past fall, a feat that shocked area football pundits. Brown had been the Skippers starting quarterback his sophomore and junior years, running an option attack, but made the move to halfback as a senior, and rushed for a league best 1,400 yards and 15 touchdowns. He also moved in to the starting defensive backfield for the first time this fall, and earned all-league accolades there as well.

Cohasset High head football coach Tony Rolfe told this reporter off the record prior to this season that Jason was going to "explode on the scene big time," but the coach conceded at the end of the season that the 5-10, 185-pound speedster flew past even his lofty expectations.

"It was definitely Jason's total commitment to the team that made him special," noted the fourth year head coach. "He had to learn a new position on the fly, and play defense for the first time too, and he turned out to be huge in both roles."

Not to go over the top with cliches or anything, but Jason's middle name might as well be "commitment".

He has been training year-round with local fitness guru Joe Hayes – a former Scituate High football and track superstar who now owns and operates Hayes Sports Performance in Cohasset Village — at least three days a week since his sophomore year, transforming his once willowy frame into 185-pounds of sculpted muscle.

The first of what Jason hopes will be many post-high school payoffs was a "nice package" from St. Anselm College to play football there next fall. Offers came from schools with far larger football programs – including from Div. I-AA coaches at UNH, the University of Maine and Central Connecticut – but Brown jumped at the promise from St. A's that he'd get the chance to compete for a starting job as a second half of the quarterfinal game, outscoring Hingham 4-1 over the final 20 minutes. Seniors Paul Previte, Eric Libby and Jason Moore all collected goals in their final game, with Davis scoring the other tally. Curt Kahn picked up an assist.

Cohasset's Eric Libby (dark jersey), who played both midfield and attack this season, finished as the Skippers' third highest scorer with 54 points (26 goals, 28 assists). He has been recruited to play lacrosse at St. Michael's in Vermont.

Senior goalie Kyle Weber, in his last game, had 10 saves. Also playing well in their final contests in blue and white were midfielder Sean Chase, defenseman Chris Caron and longstick midfielder David DeVito.

Skippers Collect All-Star Honors

Weber, Previte and Libby were three of six Cohasset players to receive all-conference honors. Senior co-captain Libby, a two-year starter after transferring from Xaverian, was named to the Pilgrim First Team all-stars as a midfielder, joining Falmouth's Jason Cleary, Norwell's Adam Grier, Duxbury's Brendan Pitt and Ben Fuchs, and Hingham's Greg Paul. Libby, who played both midfield and attack this season, finished as the Skippers' third highest scorer with 54 points (26 goals, 28 assists). He has been recruited to play lacrosse at St. Michael's in Vermont.

"Eric had an outstanding senior year," said coach Orcutt. "He was his class' best athlete, and his endurance would drive defenders crazy. He had a terrifically positive attitude, and was a great teammate and leader."

Receiving First Team Honorable Mention was senior co-captain Paul Previte, who finished behind Hingham's Fitzgerald and Lenhart, and Duxbury All-American John Sisto in the attackman balloting. Previte was hampered by a bone fracture just below his wrist for most of the season, yet still managed to finish second in team scoring with 63 points (42 goals, 21 assists). Over his four-year varsity career, Previte scored a remarkable 194 points, including 125 goals. Previte has been recruited to play for Trinity College in Hartford, Connecticut, a member of the NESCAC conference that includes NCAA Division 3 national champion Middlebury.

"Paul played in pain for most of the season," said coach Orcutt, "and rarely complained, even though the other teams would still put their best defender on him. His career highlight happened a year ago, in the state tourney, when he carried us on his back to the state final. Paul is a gamer, in the best sense, and should be able to find the back of the net at the next level as well."

Second Team honors went to co-captain Kyle Weber, co-captain Nick Spirito, Curt Kahn and Robert Hickey.

Weber, who had also earned All-Conference honors in 2001, was one of three goalies – the others being Sandwich's Ron Westgate and Marshfield's Todd Faiella – cited by league coaches. Weber finished the season with 270 saves and a save percentage of .635. Over a three-year career, Weber had more than 600 saves, and this spring started all 23 games. He turned down opportunities to play college lacrosse at Colorado and Colby, and will attend Northwestern University, a Big Ten school that does not participate in the sport at the NCAA level.

"Kyle was our defensive backbone," said Orcutt. "He's a mentally tough athlete, and an inspirational leader. His presence will be the most difficult thing for us to replace next season."

Spirito, Kahn and Hickey are all members of a talented junior class that will, on paper, make Cohasset a pre-season contender for state title honors. Spirito, a Bay State Games gold medalist in 2001, started every game for the Skippers on defense, after playing most of 2001 as a longstick midfielder. Kahn, also a 2001 BSG gold medalist, led Cohasset in scoring with 83 points (51 goals, 32 assists) and had a six-goal game versus Marshfield, and two five-goal games against Norwell, including the tournament win. Midfielder Hickey (16 goals, six assists) was injured for three weeks early in the season, but came on strong at the end, and demonstrated the face-off prowess that made him a key factor a year ago in the run to the state championship game.

"The junior class has the chance to be something really special," said Orcutt. "Besides Nick, Curt and Robert, we've got Matt Davis, who played at an all-star level this year, John Durkin, Tom Anderson, Evan Pestone and Ben Lynner. These guys are all great athletes and potential leaders. If our freshmen and sophomores make the same kind of commitment the juniors have made, we'll be very, very tough in 2003."

Cohasset's Matt Davis (#4) set up the Skippers first goal last Wednesday at Hingham and helped lead a strong second half attack. Ultimately, however, this was not enough, as Cohasset fell in the quarterfinal showdown, 12-5.

Lefty bedazzles in season opening win for Cohasset-Scituate Legion squad

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Scituate-Cohasset Legion baseball team won its season opener on Monday, 3-1, over longtime rival Milton, kicking off what coach Scott Arnold believes could well be the best ever season for the Post-118 team.

"We're loaded," stated the eighth year head coach matter-of-factly. "We've got some great pitching, and nice depth up and down the order. The biggest problem might be finding playing time for everybody."

This week's Scituate High grads Jesse Cole, Jason Connelly and Greg Levin — fresh of leading the charge for the S.H.S. baseball team's run to the Div. 2 south sectional championship game (a heartbreaking 4-3 to King Phillip on Saturday) — are back for one last hurrah with the Post 118 squad, along with fellow class of 2002 alums Tom Fitzgerald, of B.C. High, and Tim Straughn, Cohasset High's main man the last few seasons.

Scituate High standout third baseman Mike Gulinello is also back with the team, as is versatile Cohasset High junior Mike Snowdale.

All of these players were overshadowed on Monday night (at least offensively), however, by 14-year old Ted Straughn, Tim's 14-year old brother. The Cohasset High freshman started in right field, went 2-for-4 and plated two of Post 188's three runs. One of his RBI belts was a 380-foot bomb that would have easily cleared the fence at Scituate High (where the team will play most of its games).

"I didn't even know Timmy had a little brother who played baseball," admitted coach Arnold with a chuckle. "What a ballplayer he's going to be, and what a nice surprise for us."

The 3-1 score on Cohasset's fenceless Milliken Field was not indicative of Post 118's offensive explosiveness, according to Arnold.

"We had four or five shots that would have been out of Scituate High's field, but they were long outs or long doubles or triples here," reported the coach. "I'm not worried about the offense."

Doesn't look like he needs to be worried much about the pitching either.

Fitzgerald, a regular in the B.C. High rotation, went the distance on Monday, allowing just two hits and one walk while striking out 10.

"Fitzy was just a master out there," Arnold lauded. "He had that curveball snapping, and had (Milton hitters) buckling and swinging at air all night."

Fitzgerald will be followed in the rotation by twin Scituate High aces Cole (coming off a 6-2, 1.17 ERA season) and Connelly (Patriot League MVP and author of two no-hitters this season) – the same rotation as last year.

All three hurlers will be pitching at the college level next spring. Cole has accepted a full Div. 1 scholarship from Wofford College. Jason chose Western New England College over a few larger universities because of a promise from coaches to get a shot at playing every day.

Cohasset High aces Tim Straughn (with a 90 mile per hour fastball) and Snowdale are among those expected to help provide relief and pitching depth.

"We've got pitching and hitting pretty well covered, and our defense looks pretty good too," concludes Arnold. "That's all you need in baseball last I checked."

son together as a doubles team, but eventually split to partner with sophomores Andrew Wise and Andrew Busk, respectively. Those tandems, should they remain intact next year, really came together at the end of the season, winning pivotal doubles points in close matches.

Bilton was sidelined for parts of the season due to outside conflicts, but proved to be a valuable doubles player for the squad, and was one of the most improved players on the team.

This team's sole captain, Ingber, hopes to be a part of a third consecutive season above that magic .500 record. However, with the new talent coming up into the freshman ranks, he will be hard-pressed to maintain his spot as the number one singles player.

The team looks forward to gaining at least four players who could potentially step into starting roles on the team in 2003. There are even two who will likely be battling Ingber for the top spot.

Also in that battle will be sophomore Tim Anton, who broke out with a rookie season in which he compiled 10 wins in 14 matches at second singles. Should he remain at that position, he has the ability to go undefeated, as all three of the players he lost to this year have recently graduated from Norwell, Harwich and Hingham high schools.

Sophomore Jessie Brewer also had an excellent season, his second as a member of the varsity team. Brewer recorded the deciding point in five of the team's eight wins this year, as he became the only Cohasset player to beat his counterparts from both Norwell and Hingham.

With a more experienced and talented team, the Skippers will have the benefit of taking on an even more watered down version of this year's South Shore League. Norwell again will be the team to beat as they cruised to yet another SSL crown this year, and they lose only their number two singles standout, Mike Wiltshire.

After that, though, the league stands to be quite weak. Mashpee, who downed Cohasset in the first week of the season 3-2, graduates their number one, two and three singles players, and one member of their first doubles team. Norton, who handed Cohasset its only other SSL loss this year, will lose their foreign exchange ace singles player and both teammates of their first doubles pair.

In addition, the two non-league matches Cohasset had against the juggernaut Harbormen will likely be adjusted to a more manageable opponent in Scituate and/or Rockland.

Either way, with the tremendous success the girls team has had, along with the clearly bright future of the boys, Cohasset seems to have reestablished itself as a double-gender tennis town.

Youth lacrosse goes 14-6-1 at lacrosse jamboree

All seven Cohasset youth lacrosse teams traveled to Fort Devens on Sunday, June 9 to square off in three games a piece in the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League Jamboree.

The Jamboree is the largest youth lacrosse event in America, and the Cohasset children — and their parents — participated to the fullest, enjoying the food and festivities and some fine lacrosse.

Three of Cohasset's teams entered the day with unbeaten records and two of them came away with those records still in tact. In all, Cohasset finished 14-6-1 on the day.

Here is the recap of Jamboree action:

14-U Boys (grades 7-8):

Cohasset's oldest boys team finished an unbeaten season by sweeping three games to close at 11-0-1. Cohasset started the day against Needham and got all of its goals from their midfield in a 5-2 win. Jared Kinch scored twice and Mike Pecca, Dan Trendowicz, and Zach Etkind got single tallies. Goalie Ben Libby and the defense of Mike Barnes, Jared Dick, Bobby Meikleham, Robert Sylvia, Patrick Flynn and Dan McCarthy set the tone for the day by allowing Needham few good scoring chances and providing fast, efficient clears.

In the second contest, Cohasset faced a tough Topsfield squad and played a nearly flawless game in winning 8-1. Corey Chase began what would be an outstanding two-game stretch by scoring five goals and adding two assists. Aidan Buick and Austen Lanzillotti both had a goal and an assist, and Pecca added his second goal of the day to finish the scoring. Topsfield got very physical in the second half and Cohasset responded by delivering hard, clean checks and controlling the game. Trevor Brady, Dan Trendowicz and Ryan Kucinski all had big hits and seemed to gobble up nearly every ground ball.

After the physical Topsfield game Cohasset started its third game against Malden slowly, falling behind 1-0 before turning it up a notch and pulling away for a 10-3 win. Chase finished with three goals and three assists, while Trendowicz punched home two goals and Buick, Etkind, Kucinski, Mike Bunstein and Mike Martone all scored once. Eric Libby finished the day with 19 saves, as Cohasset gave up an average of just two goals for its three Jamboree games.

12-U Boys White (grades 5-6):

Cohasset White put its unbeaten record on the line in games against Topsfield, Wayland and Billerica, and Topsfield used a ball-control offense to jump ahead. Cohasset closed the lead to 4- 3 at the half on the strength of Sean Silvia, Peter Oswald and Mark Flibotte, who finished a give-and-go play with Charlie Czerkawski. Topsfield extended its lead as the second half opened. Flibotte, Czerkawski and Peter Ernst brought Cohasset close, but they could never get all the way back and the team suffered its first defeat, 8-6.

The White team quickly got back to its dominating ways in the second game against Wayland, jumping out to a lead and never letting up en route to an 8-3 win. Peter Oswald scored a hat trick, while Mike Grimm added two goals. Mark Flibotte, Ramsey Davis and Peter Ernst added single goals. Grimm added two assists, with Sean Silvia and Flibotte adding one apiece.

The White's last game was against Billerica in another one-sided effort that saw the Cohasset team put on a defensive and offensive clinic on their way to shutting out their opponent in an 8 - 0 victory. The attack group took full advantage of great midfield play by Owen Landon, Danny Brady, Sean Silvia, Ramsey Davis, and Ian Lyster-Brandt who saw to it that the offense had the ball for most of the game. Peter Oswald netted three more goals and an assist, and Charlie Czerkawski added a hat trick of his own. Mike Grim and Kyle Pinkus — who took the ball coast- to-coast on a defensive rush — completed the scoring. Wes Ulmer was spectacular in the rare shutout and throughout the day, stopping not only shots but blocking many Billerica passes. Kenny Muir, Jonny Wade, and Kyle Pinkus led a shorthanded defensive unit that was able to keep things close and get the ball to Cohasset's potent offense.

12-U Boys Blue (grades 5-6):

The Blue team opened against Medford and kept the ball moving en route to a 6-2 win. All six goals were assisted. Mike Grimm and Chris Rose each had a goal and assist. Nathan Porter, Alex Shipp, Teddy Galligan and Matt Burgess added single goals, with Justin Connors, Logan Chase, Sam DeGiacomo and Chris Mills picking up helpers.

Next up for the Blue was a physical, well-coached Topsfield team, sister squad to the team that handed Cohasset White its only loss of the year. This game was a defensive contest as each team proved to be able to turn back repeated offensive threats. The first half ended at 2-2, with Matt Burgess and Alex Shipp responsible for the goals, and Conor Murphy picking up an assist. The teams traded two more goals in the second half, with Teddy Galligan feeding Mike Grimm and Chris Rose finishing a fast-break clear as the game ended in a 4-4 tie.

The Blue team lost some players to a soccer playoff game by the time the third game rolled around against Wayland. After several delays that shortened the game even more than the jamboree format already created, the defensive unit seemed to get a little weak in the knees, allowing several quick goals and falling into a three-goal hole that they couldn't get out of. The game ended as an 8-4 Wayland win. Chris Mills scored on a feed from Peter Ernst, Sean Silvia had a solo score and Mike Grimm scored two goals, one off a feed from Ernst, the other coming on a pass from Rose.

The defense of Jake Cuneo, Mike Bilodeau, Chris Kuppens, Andersen Lynner, and David Crawford held its own for most of the day and provided a solid backbone to the strong play of the team overall. Like his counterpart, Justin Hollis was strong in the goal for all three games and created a number of scoring opportunities on his full field clears and precision passes to initiate fast breaks. The midfield also provided some great action as John McKenna, Logan Chase, Andrew Smith, Derek St. Peter, Sam DeGiacomo, Charlie Mushin, and Phil Schlawinski consistently repelled opposition threats while opening up numerous playmaking opportunities.

10-U Boys White (grades 3-4):

The 10-U White team put the cap on an undefeated season with three dominant wins at Fort Devens. Cohasset's 8 a.m. game against Wayland provided a quick wake-up call, as Wayland jumped out to a 1-0 lead. In the end, that was one of just two goals the White team would surrender all day, and the boys came roaring back to go to the half leading 4-1. Chris Walsh scored twice, John Kearney netted a Luke Ernst feed and Eamon Davis added a single tally. The second half was all Cohasset, with Geoff Evans putting up his first goal of the season on an assist from Brendan Doonan. Doonan then scored unassisted, before Kearney converted a Davis feed. Goalie Ian Quinlan closed out the scoring by taking the ball end-to-end for a breath-taking goal.

Next up was Malden, and Cohasset raced to a 6-0 lead. Eamon Davis and Brendan Doonan each scored twice, with Geoff Evans converting a John Kearney feed and Luke Ernst adding a solo goal. Ollie Forrer scored from the ground to open the second half, with Evans adding his second and Chris Walsh notching a solo score as Cohasset completed a 9-1 win that also featured outstanding net play from goalie Brendan Horrigan, who finished with eight saves.

The final game of the day was against a tough-checking Billerica team, and the White squad raced to a 3-0 halftime lead on the strength of three assisted goals: It was Forrer from Andrew Graham, Walsh from Kearney and David Hernon finalizing an Enrico Teruzzi pass. Cohasset doubled its edge in the second half, with goals from Kearney, Ernst and avis accounting for the final 6-0 margin. Ian Quinlan again was outstanding in the goal making 10 saves and starting several fast breaks, backstopping the solid defense of Terrance Durkin, Keegan Flynn and Kevin O'Connell played well all day.

10-U Boys Blue: (grades 3-4):

Cohasset Blue opened its Jamboree day with a close 4-3 win over Grafton, keyed by some great saves by goaltender Jack Murphy and a midfield that headmanned the fast break. Justin Yeager, Will Wise, Max Shipp and Sam Leahy accounted for Cohasset's goals.

Next, the Blue team squared off with Topsfield. Just as Topsfield's older boys gave Cohasset strong games, so did its youngest, with good passing skills and quick shots. Cohasset's defense, however, pressured Topsfield into some poor shots, which could then be turned into offensive chances. Down 2-1 early, Cohasset came back and eventually held on for a 6-5 win. Jack Murphy and Justin Yeager each scored two first-half goals, with Dean Driscoll and Austin Meyers scoring in the second half.

The third game saw the Blue team face an unbeaten Marblehead team, and the action was close the entire game. Despite the low score, the first half of action was clearly the best that Cohasset Blue had all year, with the team generating quality shots and using smarts and teamwork to match up to the aggressive play of a big, physical Marblehead team. Tied at 1-1 in the second half on the strength of a Jake Wheelwright goal and eight first-half saves by goalie Chris Brown, Cohasset eventually surrendered two scores and lost the game 3-1.

12-U Girls (grades 4, 5 and 6):

The Cohasset girls 12-U team played three back-and-forth games at the Jamboree, and needed its coffee in the eye-opener against Billerica. Cohasset fell behind 3-1 in the first half, then got things into gear in the second, tying the game at 5 before succumbing on a late score. Gabriella Flibotte scored twice for Cohasset, with Alexandra Graven, Maura Barnes and Madeline Leahy adding single goals. Thomson Jaffe stopped 6 Billerica shots.

In their second game, the 12-U girls again fell behind, this time to Marblehead, trailing 4-3 at the half. This time, however, the second-half comeback was more than sufficient, as Cohasset quickly captured a lead it never relinquished, finished with a 7-6 game. Flibotte scored a hat trick, with Graven adding two goals. Isabelle Franklin scored her first of the season, and Amy Meikleham also scored a single goal. Kenzie Durkin, playing her first game of the season at defense, helped Cohasset stop Marblehead's potent fast break to hang on to the win.

The young girls closed out their season playing against a Holliston team that was just starting its Jamboree day. The fresh legs showed as Holliston raced out to a 5-3 halftime lead, backed by solid goaltending. The game ended with Holliston in front 8-5. Five separate Cohasset players had single goals: Maura Barnes, Alexandra Graven, Madeline Leahy, Samantha Fortin and Gabriella Flibotte. For Fortin, the score was her first on the year.

The 12-U girls finished their season with a 5-4-1 record, remarkable for a first-year program that was one-third made of fourth-graders. Flibotte was the team's leading scorer with 26 goals, Maura Barnes added 10 points and Alexandra Graven 9. Goalie Thomson Jaffe finished the season with 56 saves and 43 goals against for a .565 save percentage.

14-U Girls (grades 7-8):

The 14-U girls also opened their Jamboree with an early-morning game against Billerica. Several of the girls showed up at the fields still in pajamas, and most of the team was sleep- walking through the first half, as Billerica jumped out to a 5-1 halftime lead. From there, Cohasset got back into the game, but it was too little too late, as Billerica held on to an 8-4 win. Kathryn Evans, Mary Previte, Kristen Dooley and Kaleigh Swain scored for Cohasset, with Dooley's goal being her first of the year. Previte added an assist.

The girls bounced back against Marblehead and controlled the action from start to finish, racing to a 3-0 halftime lead and holding on a Marblehead made a second-half run. Swain, Previte and Evans scored in the first half, with Emily Coggins netting her first of the year to ice the game in the second half, with the score Cohasset 4, Marblehead 2.

The 14-U team closed out its season against North Middlesex, falling behind 3-0 early before goals two goals from Kaleigh Swain and one from Kathryn Evans tied the game before the half. When Evans had to leave the game early, Cohasset was playing a team comprised entirely of seventh graders, and the enthusiastic bunch took control in the second half. Emily Coggins, who alternated from being sick to scoring goals, gave Cohasset the lead with a long dash to the net and a sweet backhanded shot. Michelle Madge blasted one home moments later and Lindsay Durkin closed out the scoring. Aisling Guinee made seven saves, most of them painful, to backstop the team. She got tremendous support from Elizabeth Landon, who was dominant from the coverpoint position, and Alyssa Campbell, who chased down the ground balls and started the transitions that led to Cohasset's 6-4 win.

The older girls finished their season at 4-5-1, and with nearly the entire team returning next year, the girls have reason to expect big things. Kaleigh Swain led the 14-U scoring with 8 goals and 2 assists for 10 points. Lisa Spirito added eight goals and Kathryn Evans six.

"For the girls teams to combine to finish with a .500 record in their first year is fantastic," said Chuck Jaffe, head coach of both teams and coordinator of the youth lacrosse program. "We have every reason to expect the girls program will grow and become as successful as the boys."

While the girls' season has ended, the Cohasset boys finish their season with Famil Day festivities at Milliken Field on Sunday, June 16. The Blue and White teams at the 10- and 12-year-old level will square off, while the 14-U team gets a rematch against a Duxbury squad that is responsible for the only blemish on an otherwise perfect record. Games start at 1 p.m.

LACROSSE NOTES

Family Lax Day

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse will hold its annual "Family Lax Day" this Sunday, June 16, from 12 noon-5 p.m. at Milliken Field.

Town championship games will be played and there will be a barbecue feast. The event is free and open to anyone.

Redfield Honored at Banquet

Cohasset was scheduled to have both the boys' and girls' varsities break-up dinner tonight (Thursday) at the Atlantica restaurant. At the dinner, the Cohasset Lacrosse Boosters announced that 1995 Cohasset High graduate Ben Redfield was the recipient of the 2002 Founders' Award, given to a former lacrosse player who continued to find success in the game. Redfield graduated from Roger Williams University in 1999, where he was captain, a two-time all-conference and All-East selection as a midfielder, and selected for the New England East-West Senior all-star game. Since graduation, he has continued to be an active club lacrosse player. The award was to be presented by Ken Ekberg, the founder of the Cohasset lacrosse program and the head coach of the boys' varsity for the first ten years of its existence. Redfield is the third recipient, and joins 1996 CHS grad Kenneth Leahy, the career scoring leader at Providence College, and 1997 CHS grad Matt Belson, captain of the 2001 Lafayette College team and an Patriot League all-star long-stick midfielder.

Brown ultra-motivated to succeed at next level

freshman. That chance will likely come at defensive back and returning kicks/punts, as the Hawks are deep in veteran talent in the offensive backfield.

"Getting a chance to play right away and show what I could do was real important to me," Jason explained. "Coming from a smaller school like Cohasset, I wanted to prove myself right away. I'm definitely looking to play halfback in college, though, but I know I might have to wait a season or so."

It won't be an easy wait, however. Let's just say "Patience" would not be a good middle name for Jason.

This brings us to tomorrow night's Shriner's Game, and the reason Jason is so anxious to show well. He's hoping to catch the eye of a college scout or 20, and hopefully parlay his performance here in to a bigger and better situation.

"I'm committed to St. Anselm right now, but if something better should come along…well, I'd have to cross that bridge when I got to it," he said.

"He'd go for it," confirmed father Richard Brown a bit less diplomatically. "Don't get me wrong, Jason is happy at St. Anselm, but if he can get a better opportunity, he'll take it. Jason is very serious about football."

Jason is a very serous athlete period.

"Jason definitely trains harder than anyone I know," confirmed Brown's 2001 CHS football co-captain, Will Prendergast. "He loves to play. He gives it his all every time out."

For Jason, the work hardly seems unnatural; it simply comes with the territory in which he aspires to dwell.

"I love to train," said the senior. "I really enjoy working hard. If you work hard, you will have success. It is a lot, but I like to do it."

Last summer Jason and Joe Hayes would power lift three days a week, and work on agility and speed the other three. This summer's regimen has been even more militaristic to date, according to Richard Brown.

All this extra work helped Jason squeeze out every ounce of athletic potential possible. Not only did it turn him in to an all-state caliber football talent, it also made him a star for the Cohasset High track team. Among his many feats with the unbeaten CHS track squad the past two seasons, Brown has been the anchor man for the 4x100 relay team that qualified each of these two seasons for the Massachusetts All-State championships.

He's also recorded times of 4.5 in the 40-yard dash, which puts him on a par with several Div. 1 collegiate halfbacks…in other words, right where he wants to be, at least on that front.

"My work isn't done, though," Jason concludes. "I still have a lot I want to accomplish, and the only way I'm going to get where I want to be is with more hard work."

Few who know Jason well would bet against him.

Up, up & away

relatively the same as it has been for the past two years. The Lady Skippers went 14-2 in 2001, and lost only one senior; the same holds true for this year's 15-2 squad.

Junior captain Lindsay Grossman, who was named to the SSL All-Star team for the third consecutive year, posted an impressive year at the number one spot. She bumped off fellow All-Scholastic Sara Bitetti for the third time in her career, took care of Canton's talented Marie Sakolovsky in the quarterfinals, and played even with Chelsea Mills, the number two ranked player at the State Individuals.

Freshman Elizabeth Stone burst onto the varsity scene to give Cohasset the most frightening 1-2 punch in the league. Going undefeated in match play without giving up so much as a set the entire year, Stone did not just beat her opponents. Even against the best teams in EMass, (Canton, Hingham, Norwell, Westwood), Stone posted 6-0, 6-0 decisions against players who had not lost to anyone else all year.

At third singles, two sophomores, Holly Graham and Emily Sullivan, both proved themselves to be formidable threats. Meehan even noted that on many teams in the area, either one of them could play number one but they are sometimes sidelined because of the staggering depth of her lineup.

Possibly the most shocking asset to this team is its depth. For a school Cohasset's size, facing schools with student bodies two, three and even four times larger, the number of talented players the Lady Skippers could put in and get wins from is startling.

Players such as juniors Molly Flanagan, Taylor O'Brien and Nicole Needle, who did not start regularly, could almost always be counted on to step in and win second doubles if needed.

Cohasset should receive even more talent from the Middle School next year, as the younger sisters of all-stars Grossman and junior Julie Shea will be joining the team.

The Lady Skippers had six all-stars: not bad considering 14 total players are named. They decimated SSL co-Champions Norwell, 5-0, and Patriot League champs Hingham, 4-1, in the same week. They beat 15-0 Canton on the road to advance in the tourney this year. And next year's team will be better than the one the Skipper faithful saw this year.

Now those lofty expectations seem a bit more reasonable.

Don't miss annual Strawberry fest

Be sure to save your appetite for Cohasset's 14th Annual Strawberry Festival, held in conjunction with the South Shore Art Center's Festival on the Common, Friday through Sunday.

This year more than 100 volunteers will transform Cohasset's Second Congregational Church grounds (next to Town Hall) into an outdoor café and nursery where Arts Festival visitors can rest and enjoy lunch or dinner capped off by a delicious Strawberry Shortcake made with fresh local strawberries and whipped cream heaped over a fresh buttermilk biscuit. The café will also serve fresh salads with various toppings including barbecue chicken, as well as hot dogs, fresh pastries, and a full range of beverages.

Fresh baked goods, fruit cups and beverages will also be available "to go" for those who wish to enjoy their treats as they explore the more than 80 exhibits and attractions of the Arts Festival on the Common.

The church's Strawberry Shortcakes have been a popular tradition in Cohasset for more than a dozen years. More than 2400 shortcakes are expected to be served over the three day Festival beginning Friday from 2-7 p.m., and continuing Saturday (10 a.m. to 7 p.m.) and Sunday (noon to 6 p.m.).

The Strawberry Festival at the Second Congregational Church is always a hit. Here Jacqui Blake digs into a dish of strawberry shortcake at last year's Festival on the Common.

The Second Congregational Church will also hold a plant sale on Saturday, June 15 from 10am to 2 p.m. at the front of the church on Highland Avenue. All proceeds from the Strawberry Festival café and plant sale will support local charities.

For more information, please call the Second Congregational Church office at 383-0345.

IT'S HAPPENING

Benefit dinner for discovery museum

Celebrity Chef Anthony Ambrose is creating a special dinner menu to benefit Our World, the new children's discovery museum set to open in Cohasset in the fall of 2003.

The dinner will be held July 1, at 6:30 p.m. at Atlantica Restaurant, 44 Border Street, Cohasset. Tickets are $125 each with a portion of the proceeds going to the non-profit Our World Inc. Reservations are required at 781-383-0030. The deadline for reservations is June 21.

Ambrose, a Cohasset resident, is chef-owner of Ambrosia on Huntington in Boston. He and his wife, Dorene, are parents of two small children and vitally interested in the museum project.

Leah Taylor Roy and Mary Larson are in the midst of a $1 million fundraising campaign to construct the museum and an associated global-themed playground in a two story wing of the former Joseph Osgood School. The two Cohasset residents view the project as a way to bring cultural diversity to the area.

The town's new library will occupy the rest of the former school building, which is located at the corner of Ripley Road and Sohier Street. Roy and Larson believe the museum will be the perfect tie-in for the library.

Yard sale benefit

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee is holding a giant yard sale to benefit the Joseph F. Walsh 3rd Scholarship, which has been awarded annually since 1978 to a Cohasset High School graduating senior. The sale will be on Saturday, June 15 at 85 Linden Drive (off Jerusalem Road). Hours are 8 a.m.-noon (no early-birds). To donate items, call 383-0222.

Old Cohasset as seen in postcards

Cohasset Historical Society member John Connell and historian David Wadsworth will present a very special projection display and discussion of "Postcards of Old Cohasset" on Thursday, June 13 at 7:30 p.m. at the Lightkeepers' Residence.

The event is free and all are welcome. Refreshments will be served. For information, call 781-383-1434.

Lighthouse lovers lecture is June 13

Hull Lifesaving Museum For Lighthouse Lovers June Slideshow — Lecture "New England Lighthouses" is Thursday, June 13, 7p.m. at the Lifesaving Museum $3 members, $5 non-members

Please join guest speaker William Patton for an entertaining and informative evening of armchair exploration. The lighthouses that stand sentry along the New England coast have witnessed raging storms and terrible tragedies. Some have also been the sites of heroic deeds, such as the 1846 rescue off the Maine coast of young John Fitzgerald, future Mayor of Boston and grandfather of John F. Kennedy. Patton will regale us with this and many other fascinating lighthouse tales during the lecture, which accompanies the museum's current exhibit, Beacons of Boston Harbor. Light refreshments will be available. For more information please contact Museum Educator, Victoria Stevens, at the museum, 781-925-5433.

We'll make you smile.

Third-grade class knows what it means to recycle

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The three Rs usually mean "reading, 'riting and 'rithmetic."

But Maureen Wolcott's third-graders learned Monday the three Rs can also mean "recycle, reuse and refuse."

Selectman Merle Brown, who also sits on the recycling committee, and his fellow committee member Allan MacDonald paid the class a visit to talk about recycling and to have a look at the new recycling bins the pupils purchased with money they earned. The kids also decorated the bins with a new logo they designed themselves.

"You are teaching everyone you come in contact with the importance of recycling,"
— Allan MacDonald, recycling committee

Wolcott's classes have led the effort to recycle paper at the Kindergarten through grade 3 school for the past three years. The class had been using cardboard boxes to collect the paper; but Wolcott said those boxes could be hard to come by so it was time to find something more permanent.

So with a project that involved a little marketing, mathematics and economics, the class organized a "snack sale" during which they sold snacks for 25 cents apiece. Class members contacted all the teachers to find out when each class had snack time. They also signed up to bring snacks for the sale and figured out how many they had to sell to make $100.

Then each child in Wolcott's class designed a logo that represented recycling. The designs were incorporated into the final logo: a map of the world with an "R" in the middle that was painted on both sides of the 25 blue plastic recycling bins, enough for the entire school. The class purchased blue bins because they match the blue tile in the school.

MacDonald said he was very proud of the class.

"You are teaching everyone you come in contact with the importance of recycling," he told the youngsters, explaining that the United States is the most wasteful country in the world.

"We use a lot of nature's resources and waste many, we hope you can help stop that," MacDonald said.

Brown explained how not recycling costs the town a lot of money. He said the town pays $100 a ton to have trash hauled away, but far less for recyclable materials like paper and newspaper, which is remade into more newspaper, paper towels or napkins, for example. Recycling is also good for the environment, he said.

MacDonald and Brown talked about the "RTF" which used to be the "dump," a word that is no longer accurate because everything at the RTF is hauled away. When Brown asked what RTF stood for, the kids had no trouble guessing Recycling; but the word Transfer proved a little more difficult. Facility was the toughest with one student guessing "plantation" and another "foundation."

But names aside, the most important lesson of the project is to recycle, reuse and refuse, Brown said.

Brown explained "refuse" by saying he bought two loaves of bread and refused to take the bag at Shaw's; and then bought a card at Walgreen's and refused to take the bag there.

He told the students their teacher may not have a big "green heart" but she has a big concern for the environment.

MacDonald said recycling is really about values.

"Bless Maureen (Wolcott) for seeing this as a means of teaching values," he said.

Wolcott said parent Sheila Sinclair has been invaluable. Sinclair volunteers to bring the students around to the different classrooms to collect and empty the bins, so Wolcott can stay with the rest of the class.

Cohasset Teen Garage

The Cohasset Youth Resources Committee announces the opening and operation of the new Teen Garage for Cohasset youth.

Located in the Old Town Highway Garage, directly behind the Red Lion Inn, the Teen Garage was completely renovated during 1999 and opened on Jan. 7, 2002.

The Youth Resources Committee hag engaged a part-time Youth Resources Coordinator in the person of Ms. Kate Daley, who will oversee the operation and programming of the Garage.

To allow Ms. Daley more freedom of her time applied to youth functions, the recreation director will continue to assume the administrative responsibilities of the operation and the nine-member Youth Resources Committee will continue to provide leadership direction and policy making decisions.

The Garage is specifically designed for Cohasset youth, grade 6 and over.

While special activities and dances will be frequently offered for various age groups, the facility sports video games, pool table, large screen TV, lounge area, snack bar area, and an assortment of other electronic and non-electronic games.

Youth Resources are indebted to the many residents, businesses, and civic groups and organizations that provided the financial support to renovate the Garage. Approximately $40,000 was privately raised to renovate the Garage.

The Garage is available for rental for $75 for two-hour time slots for birthday parties and or other private functions. Should you be interested in renting the Garage, call the recreation department office at 781-383-4109.

Residents are invited to stop in any time we are open to have a look at the new Teen Garage.

Lorna Luft live

Judy Garland's daughter performs at Copley Theatre

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Entertainment legend Judy Garland died in London on June 22, 1969, at age 47. This year, on the 33rd anniversary of her mother's passing, Garland's youngest daughter, Lorna Luft, will be in Boston for a concert at the Copley Theatre.

"I don't dwell on that date when I remember my mother," Luft explained by telephone last week from her Los Angeles home. "I think about it, of course, but then I go out and do my show."

This year, the show will be "An Evening with Lorna Luft," presented in Boston by the Quincy-based J. M. Productions. Accompanied by a four-piece band, under the direction of her husband, Colin Freeman, Luft will perform a program of songs by Jerry Herman, Burt Bacharach, and the late Peter Allen.

"I've decided to do a show featuring the music of these three men, because I know and respect them so much. They are each extremely gifted," Luft says. "As part of the show, I'll be sharing personal stories about each of them. They are three men who are very important to me."

Indeed, one was even related to Luft for a time. The late Australian composer and performer Peter Allen was the first husband of Luft's older half-sister, Liza Minnelli. One time family members or not, Luft has strong feelings about all three men.

"Jerry Herman ("Hello, Dolly!", "Mame," "La Cage Aux Folles") is such a good friend. I'll probably do the songs that Jerry likes me to do from his best-known Broadway musicals. With Burt Bacharach ("Say A Little Prayer," "Do You Know the Way to San Jose" "Message to Michael), there is also a tremendous wealth of great material. Burt also did the music for my first Broadway show, "Promises, Promises," so he is very special to me. And Peter Allen ("I Honestly Love You" and "Don't Cry Out Loud") was such an incredible songwriter, too."

Garland fans shouldn't feel left out either. "I will probably be doing some of my mother's music, too, although it is hard to do much of it without a full orchestra. I'm not sure yet, exactly what I'll sing. When it comes to my mother's songs, I never choose a favorite. I love them all."

"My mother wasn't a tragic figure. She had tragedy in her life, for sure, but she was not a sad person. My mother was a truly funny and warm human being."
Lorna Luft

Born to the "world's greatest entertainer," Judy Garland, and her third husband, producer Sidney Luft, on November 21, 1952, Luft made her professional debut at age 11 on the 1963 Christmas episode of her mother's CBS-TV variety series, "The Judy Garland Show." In 1967, at the age of 15, Luft once again shared the stage with her mother and younger brother, Joey Luft, in a summer concert tour. The highlight of the tour was the legendary one-month engagement on Broadway at the Palace Theatre.

More recently, Luft has appeared in the national tours of the musicals "They're Playing Our Song" and "Guys and Dolls." She has also given concerts all over the world. Her film appearances include "Grease 2" and "Where The Boys Are '84." On television, Luft was a series regular on "Trapper John MD" In addition to her Boston engagement, Luft will open for Don Rickles later this month at the Stardust Hotel and Casino in Las Vegas.

Lorna Luft will sing the music of Jerry Herman, Burt Bacharach and the late Peter Allen June 22 at Boston's Copley Theatre.

The singer, actress and author feels very lucky to have learned about show business from one of its brightest stars.

"My mother took her work very seriously," Luft recalls. "My feeling has always been that she made us step up to the plate, because she was used to working with the best people. She was incredibly giving, but you had to be up to her standard. She was just one of the best entertainers there ever was or will be."

Garland's entertainment industry status is seldom questioned, but her personal life — which included five marriages, frequent money troubles, and alleged dependencies on prescription drugs and alcohol — has been the subject of endless debate and speculation. Luft is quick to address what she believes may be the most common misconception.

"My mother wasn't a tragic figure. She had tragedy in her life, for sure, but she was not a sad person," Luft explains. My mother was a truly funny and warm human being."

Her own 1998 autobiography, "Me and My Shadows: Living with the Legacy of Judy Garland" gave Luft the chance to tell the story of her mother's life as she knew it. The book enjoyed a long stint on "The New York Times" bestseller list and was made into a two-part, four-hour ABC-TV miniseries which Luft co-executive produced. Starring Judy Davis as Judy Garland, the mini-series earned high ratings and went on to become one of the most honored programs of the 2001 television season. It earned five Emmy awards among its many

Beyond the Byrds

60s rocker Roger McGuinn melds music and storytelling

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Believe it or not, Roger McGuinn, the one-time leader of 1960s folk-rock legends the Byrds and the wistful voice on that band's classic singles such as "Mr. Tambourine Man," "Eight Miles High," and "Turn! Turn! Turn!" is about to turn 60 next month.

The good news, besides McGuinn staying around long enough to hit 60, is that he is still out performing regularly and with as much energy, vitality and even youthful excitement as ever. His live shows these days, which are almost always solo-acoustic, are fond, storyteller-style career retrospectives which musically touch upon even more eras than the singer himself has been walking the planet.

A typical set might take listeners from McGuinn's roots in traditional Irish folk songs and ballads by his idol, Pete Seeger (who wrote "Turn! Turn! Turn!" and another Byrds standard "The Bells of Rhymney"), through the classic Dylan-meets the Beatles song craft of the Byrds, straight up to the more current sounds influenced by the likes of Tom Petty, country rockers Wilco, the Jayhawks and others.

Roger McGuinn comes to the Company Theatre June 15.

Local fans can expect all this and musical points in between when McGuinn appears in concert at Norwell's Company Theatre Saturday, June 15 at 8 p.m.

"I like to blend telling stories and singing songs when I play live, and create a very relaxed, intimate atmosphere," said McGuinn. "This is the type of show I like to do nowadays and have been doing for quite awhile actually. A lot of people at the shows tell me it's like the kind of show that Pete Seeger used to do, with the same character and flavor. That's actually true because Pete (Seeger) was always a major inspiration to me in many areas of my own performing. I usually write my set list just before I go on for the show, and maybe shuffle around with the songs I'm going to play to work the crowd. I'm always sensitive to the direction my set is taking and the feeling of the audience at any given time."

Two of McGuinn's most recent solo CDs can offer fans an idea of what to expect at Saturday's Norwell show. 2000's Live From Mars is a showcase of the singer's current solo-acoustic/storytelling show, where McGuinn updates Byrds classics such as those mentioned plus "Chestnut Mare," "So You Want To Be a Rock 'n' Roll Star" and others in versions unplugged but still with that familiar, ringing 12-string Rickenbacker sound of the band's heyday. He also rocks out acoustically with Elvis Presley's "Heartbreak Hotel" as well as renderings of overlooked gems such as 60s folkster Don Gibson's "Daddy Roll 'Em." Much of this is interspersed with humorous recollections of the singer's earliest days playing at the Gate of Horn folk club in his native Chicago, touring with his first folk bands the Limeliters and the Chad Mitchell Trio, writing the hit "You Showed Me" for the Turtles and crafting the magical "Mr Tambourine Man."

The other recent disc of note is last year's Treasures From the Folk Den, part of a project that is close to McGuinn's heart as a folk musician and Ian Folk Den originated as an internet venture on the singer's Web site at www.mcguinn.com <http://www.mcguinn.com> where beginning in 1994, McGuinn began posting his own recordings of traditional folk songs — from America, the British Isles, Europe and Australia and all eras of the last century — for free MP3 download once a month. His motivation for the project was a desire to preserve folk's rich traditional heritage, which he believed was being buried nearly into extinction by modern, mass-marketed musical trends.

The periodic online posting finally evolved into a full CD endeavor after seven years. The Folk Den disc features McGuinn interpreting and modernizing "rootsy" folk styles from Celtic ballads and sea chantys to field and mountain hymns and Delta-style blues, with prominent help from such folk-legend friends as Joan Baez, Tommy Makem, Judy Collins, Odetta, Seeger and others. Callanan celebrates Clooney

Weymouth cabaret singer pays tribute to legendary songstress

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Mary Callanan is a Weymouth actress/cabaret singer with a long and impressive list of credits behind her.

A cabaret fellow member of the Eugene O'Neill symposium, Callanan's career her also taken her to all the key cabaret circuit stops in Boston and New York and on national tours with productions of Big, Damn Yankees, The Sound of Music and Rogers & Hammerstein's Cinderella along with numerous stage appearances throughout Boston and New England.

But before stepping onto theatre and cabaret stages, Callanan performed as a big-band singer, owing partly to a musical genre which in her day still maintained a solid core circuit and following although long past its prime. It was here that the singer nurtured certain tastes that she has more recently combined in enterprising form with her theatre experience. Teaming with her musical director and accompanist, Brian Patton, of Boston, Callanan has lately staged her own personalized tribute shows to cabaret-friendly artists from the big-band era as well as contemporary pop, such as "It's a Good Day," a musical homage to Peggy Lee, and a similar production dedicated to Burt Bacharach and Carole King.

In what is arguably a further step up in musical sophistication and artistry, Callanan's latest project in this venture takes on Rosemary Clooney, who the singer describes as one of the leading interpreters of the American songbook. Callanan and her partner Patton will perform "Hey There," celebrating Clooney's music and career, at Quincy's Raffael's Restaurant over two weeks this month, with evening shows on Wednesdays and Thursdays, June 19 & 20, 26 & 27 at 7:30 p.m. and afternoon matinees added on Wednesdays.

"Rosemary Clooney has been an idol and inspiration to me for a long time," said Callanan. "When I worked as a big band singer, I sang or first became familiar with a lot of her signature songs. And I always noticed and admired the way her material could go from one song that sounded like hillbilly roots to another that was a heart-wrenching ballad. Her versatility was just amazing to me. Plus she was a fantastic storyteller onstage and I really got to admire her style and humor as a performer."

"Rosemary Clooney has been an idol and inspiration to me for a long time. When I worked as a big band singer, I sang or first became familiar with a lot of her signature songs."
Weymouth cabaret singer Mary Callanan

For this fan, Clooney is obviously far more than the aunt of the former ER star — George Clooney. Rosemary Clooney's fame in her day more than rivaled that currently enjoyed by her nephew. The singer notched up 24 Top 40 hits during her prime era recording for Columbia Records from 1951-54.

Callanan doesn't forget Clooney's renown and accomplishments of yesteryear. Nor does she overlook the controversies that surrounded the singer's career in her tribute show. Clooney's numerous chart hits included the sophisticated jazz ballads that were her true forte and artistic priority — songs like "Hey There" and "You'll Never Know" — but also, for better or worse, fluffy novelty tunes at the insistent demand of producer Mitch Miller for attempts at mass pop appeal, such as "Doggie In the Window" and "Come On-A My House."

Naturally, it was the latter form of material that proved by far the biggest seller in the cultural atmosphere of the early 50s. But even as her commercial career soared, the dilemma of integrity versus success left Clooney frustrated as a singer and artist. Other hardships followed as the 50s went on. The rock 'n' roll explosion pushed Clooney's style of music off the charts and her career into obscurity. Marital troubles along with increasing dependencies on drugs and alcohol also took their toll, leading to a disastrous climax at a resort performance in Reno in 1968, when the singer broke down and began screaming and cursing violently at the audience. Clooney was taken from the stage in restraints and spent four years in a psychiatric ward before recovering and beginning a career comeback in the 1970s.

Musically and biographically, Callanan's tribute show covers it all, from the good to the bad to the ugly.

"We show all the sides of Rosemary (Clooney) musically in the show," Callanan said. "We naturally put an emphasis on the really classy material like 'Hey There,' 'Blues In the Night' and 'Do You Miss New York.' But we also perform the songs like 'Come On-A My House' and 'Botch-a-Me' as important parts of Rosemary's career. These songs were, after all, some of her biggest hits, and though she may not have enjoyed them, she certainly did well by them. They made her famous and probably gave her more freedom as an artist later on. The way we look at it, if she hadn't sung these songs, she might have never sung something like 'Tenderly,' which I think is the quintessential Rosemary Clooney song."

Weymouth singer Mary Callanan performs "Hey There" a celebration of Rosemary Clooney's music this month at Raffael's in Quincy.

"Our show is what we call a sentimental journey, covering Rosemary's two separate careers, from her initial stardom to her comeback. The tribute is both chronological and thematic, which I think in this case go hand in hand."

In between weeks at Raffael's, Callanan and Patton will also be appearing at Boston's Copley Theatre on June 22, opening for singer and Liza Minelli half-sister Lorna Luft in her show "An Evening With Lorna Luft."

Goat cheese soufflé

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

For many home cooks, this recipe has two strikes against it: it uses goat cheese and it is a soufflé. Give me just a moment to sell you on this concept. It is simple to put together, cooks in just 23 minutes, and is an easy way to bring the elegance of restaurant dining home.

The idea for this recipe came from the London chef Sally Clarke who, in turn, was inspired by Alice Waters. Although I loved Ms. Clarke's recipe, it was too rich for my taste, using a superabundance of cheese and cream. A few bites was enough to send one running for a health club. The soufflés were also supposed to be baked in shallow soup plates, a notion that is best suited for a restaurant, not a home, setting.

The first step was to lighten the load by severely reducing the quantities of cheese. The Parmesan went from a whopping 2 1/4 cups to 1 cup and the goat cheese was reduced from 14 ounces to eight! I was not in Weight Watchers territory but things were moving in the right direction. Light cream did not work as well as the heavy cream called for by Ms. Clarke. I took the eggs down a notch to five from six but the real breakthrough occurred when I added a bit of cream of tartar to the egg whites before beating them. (I always do this when making soufflés. Cream of tartar is an acid that helps to create a more stable foam.) This made the whites more elastic, easier to fold, and also higher rising. Other ingredients included salt, pepper, and chopped fresh thyme. Now I had a very good soufflé but I wanted to make the recipe as friendly as possible for the home cook.

The first trick was to beat the whites first (the cream of tartar stabilizes the whites so that they can be held a few minutes) so I could use the same beaters for the yolks. (If the whites are beaten last, they must be cleaned first to remove any traces of yolk.) I found that instead of simply beating the yolks until smooth, if I beat them a couple of minutes it further lightened the final texture of the soufflé. It also made the folding of the egg white and yolk mixtures that much easier.

The original recipe called for using soup plates as baking dishes. I have done this at home but most folks don't have the right type of plate (they have to be shallow) nor the oven space to bake six or eight plates at one time. I tried a soufflé dish but this was a failure – the top was dry and the inside was runny. However, an oval casserole dish (1 1/2 quart or about 10 x 7 inches) worked nicely when the soufflé was baked at 400 degrees for about 23 minutes. (Other oven temperatures were less successful.) I prepped the baking dish with butter and Parmesan per the original recipe which made the soufflé release nicely and taste great. This recipe also works well in custard cups or ramekins. The variation below is designed to be used with 3/4 cup containers and the baking time is then reduced to a mere 15 minutes.

Freshly ground black pepper to taste

GOAT CHEESE SOUFFLE WITH THYME AND PARMESAN

The recipe will also accommodate eight single servings prepared in 3/4 cup custard cups or ramekins, which is a common size. Be absolutely sure that your oven is calibrated properly for this recipe. Many ovens are off by 50 degrees or more. Do not used aged goat cheese. Instead, use the logs of fresh goat cheese that have a relatively light texture.

1 teaspoon unsalted butter
1 cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese
5 large eggs at room temperature, separated
1/2 teaspoon cream of tartar
8 ounces fresh goat cheese (not aged)
1/2 cup heavy cream
3/4 teaspoon finely chopped fresh thyme leaves
1/2 teaspoon salt

1. Heat the oven to 400 degrees and adjust a rack to the center position. Butter the inside of a 1 1/2 quart oval baking dish and dust with two tablespoons of the Parmesan cheese.

2. Add the egg whites and cream of tartar to a large mixing bowl. Using an electric mixer and beat on medium low speed until combined. Increase speed to medium high and beat until whites form soft billowy peaks, about two minutes, being careful not to overbeat in which case they will look dry and lumpy. Set aside. Place the yolks in a medium mixing bowl and beat on medium high until they are thickened and lemon colored, about two minutes. Add the goat cheese and beat on low to incorporate. Increase the speed to medium and continue beating until the mixture is smooth, about one minute. Add the cream, 2/3-cup Parmesan, thyme, salt and pepper and mix on medium until well-combined, about thirty seconds longer.

3. Add the yolk mixture to the whites and fold together using a rubber spatula until homogeneous. Pour into the prepared baking dish and sprinkle with remaining Parmesan. Bake until the soufflé is dark golden brown, puffed about 1 1/2 inches above the rim of the dish, and barely jiggles in the center when shaken, about 20 to 25 minutes. Serve immediately.

Serves 6 to 8

INDIVIDUAL SERVINGS VARIATION

Increase the butter to two teaspoons and the grated Parmesan to one cup plus two tablespoons. Prepare eight 3/4-cup ramekins or custard cups in place of the baking dish using 1/4 cup Parmesan for dusting. Place them on a baking sheet large enough to hold them without touching. Evenly distribute the soufflé batter into the cups; sprinkle with the remaining Parmesan and bake until dark golden brown and very puffy, about 15 minutes. Serve immediately.

A dazzling array of showy blossoms brightens our home landscapes during the month of June as the spring season comes to a close. Small, starry, cream-colored blooms appear on Korean dogwoods (Cornus kousa) eventually covering the upright branches of these attractive ornamental trees with long-lasting, glistening white flowers. A profusion of tubular red or pink blooms clothe the branches of Weigela and the sweet perfume of snow white mock oranges (Philadelphus) fills the air. Regal rhododendrons display their majestic trusses of pink, white, lavender, red and purple.

Sadly, our recent monsoons have taken their toll on many of these dramatic blossoms. An experienced gardener quickly learns that torrential downpours are inevitable during early June coinciding with the blooming of many of our more spectacular perennials and shrubs. Nearly every season, the fragile, tissue-paper blossoms of Oriental poppies, elegant bearded iris and the impressive double-flowered peonies fall victim to storms causing these voluptuous blooms to sprawl on the ground before we are fully able to enjoy their splendor.

Regrettably, the heavy rains of the past week did little to wash away the innumerable creepy, crawly pests that infest our gardens. Slugs and snails are thriving this season chewing holes in hosta leaves and devouring our tender young annual and vegetable transplants. Caterpillars have defoliated many of our trees and shrubs. Aphids seem particularly prolific this year and the Asiatic lily leaf beetle continues to spread and decimate our lilies.

Homeowners are flocking to nurseries seeking relief, hoping to zap the intruders with any means available as long as it acts immediately and they can see the little varmints lying on their backs with their feet up in the air. Unfortunately, this often leads to the use of toxic pesticides that disrupt the natural balance. Often, the more you spray, the more you have to spray. Most pesticides are harmful to our beneficial bug controllers including birds, spiders, ladybugs, and a host of other good guys.

Controlling beetle grubs in the lawn is one of the most common concerns during the spring and fall seasons. As crows and skunks forage for these tasty morsels, they shred the turf leaving an unsightly mess While a few of the C-shaped, white larva per square foot of turf are normal and not a threat to the viability of the lawn, larger numbers can decimate the root system of the grasses creating large brown patches that lift off in lifeless mats.

Immediate action with a grub control product containing Dylox will eliminate the existing population but it is only effective for a week or two and should only be used when and where grubs are actively feeding. Copious quantities of water (3/4 to 1 inch of water) must be applied to activate the chemical and disperse it into the soil. By June, the grubs are no longer feeding and soon beetles will begin to hatch.

To prevent a similar infestation this fall, a grub control containing Merit should be applied this month. This chemical works systemically and is absorbed by the roots of the grass plants so that when the tiny grubs begin feeding in August, they ingest the chemical and succumb. It takes several weeks for the product to be absorbed which is why application should be done in mid-June. It should be noted that there are a number of different beetles that lay their eggs in turf including Japanese beetles and European chafers. Not all grub control products contain Merit, which seems to be one of the most effective means of dealing with many types of grubs and apparently a variety of other pests currently plaguing our plants, including the Hemlock Woolly Adelgid. Merit is available in both liquid and granular forms at local nurseries. If your lawn has not experienced significant grub damage in the past, preventive chemicals may not be warranted and a healthy, well-maintained lawn will often be reasonably grub-free.

Be sure to monitor your true lilies for lily leaf beetle, a Chinese lacquer red, elongated beetle that feeds on lily foliage. Adult beetles hibernate in the soil through the winter, emerge in early spring, and begin decimating all parts of the lily as they multiply at an alarming rate. Rows of crimson-colored eggs are laid on the underside of the leaves. Larvae encase themselves in their excrement appearing as tiny globs of gray goo on the foliage. Manual removal is tedious; the adults move quickly and fall to the ground and the gooey larvae are disgusting. An application of Merit around lily bulbs in early spring has shown some success in reducing the devastating effects of this recent scourge. Sevin dust sprinkled on the leaves early in the season before bees are actively gathering pollen is also effective. Neem products may be helpful when larva first begin chewing. Sevin and a variety of other toxic, systemic chemicals including Orthene and Isotox may be tried as a last resort later in the season. This pest effects primarily lilies that grow from bulbs, not daylilies, which are fibrous-rooted perennials.

Monitor your plantings regularly and select plants that are less prone to disease and insect problems if you wish to minimize your use of toxic chemicals. Patience, tolerance and research are essential for gardeners and apply to all aspects of this rewarding hobby especially pest control.

achievements.

For Luft, the acclaim affirmed her own decision to take on the project. "I can't say enough about how pleased I have been with the success. My mother deserved her story to be told this way." Although the book and mini-series met with the approval of Luft's brother, the same could not be said for their father who is now in his 80s.

"My father was very bitter, mean and nasty about this entire matter," Luft says. "He always said he wanted to write the book, because he feels he knew my mother better than anyone. He wanted to write the book for years, but he never did anything about it. It's very sad to me that he wasn't willing to support his child on something as big as this."

Luft may be estranged from her father, but she is quick to dispel similar rumors concerning her relationship with half-sister Liza Minnelli. When the latter married producer David Gest this March in a lavish Manhattan ceremony, Luft was not in attendance.

"I was already booked to perform for former President Clinton in Australia on the same date that they chose for the wedding. My absence was about nothing more than a scheduling conflict. I haven't met my sister's new husband yet, but if he makes her happy then he's fine with me."

What makes Luft happiest is her own family, which includes her husband and her two children from an earlier marriage, Jesse, 18, and Vanessa, 11. She has made sure that they are aware that they are the current generation of one of the most famous show business families of all time.

"My children have a sense of their heritage. My son read my book and they both know as much as they want to know. They have seen many of my mother's movies, including 'The Wizard of Oz' more times than I can count. It's hard thing for them to fully understand who Judy Garland was, because to them she is their grandmother. They are both wonderful children, though, and I am very proud of them. My son will be a freshman at San Francisco State this fall, which makes me very happy. I want them both to go to college."

Like many parents, Luft doesn't always understand her children's choices in music. "They listen to all types of music, including some classic rock from my generation. I've listened to a lot of it with them, but I draw the line at rap music. I tell my son to pull over and let me out of the car when that stuff comes on the radio."

In other instances, however, entertainment choices are made by the entire family. "We stop everything in our house to watch "The Osbournes" on MTV."

("An Evening with Lorna Luft" with Weymouth's own Mary Callanan as the opening act will be presented at the Copley Theatre, 505 Boylston Street, Boston, on June 22. For tickets and information, call 617/931-2000, or visit www.allaboutjmproductions.com.)

Beyond the Byrds

disc's songs are also available on the Web site's MP3 page, which interestingly enough, also contains a pair of timely patriotic turns with McGuinn's renditions of a Henry Van Dyk poem, "America For Me," and a soulful "Star Spangled Banner" which strikes a Byrds-like, "Turn! Turn! Turn!" vibe.

"I'm into keeping up with the latest technology, and I'm also into a lot of good free stuff on the Internet," McGuinn said. "So I'm combining those two energies with the deep interest I have in preserving the traditional songs. The idea for this came about around 1992, when I thought that the music business in general had just gone so one-dimensional, focusing on only the current trends in music."

McGuinn said things have improved somewhat noting the recognition of more traditional music with the success of the "Oh Brother, Where Art Thou," soundtrack.

"But ten years ago, things looked pretty bleak as far as preserving that kind of music was concerned. hope my efforts have helped in improving the situation," he added.

McGuinn's future plans for Folk Den include more monthly internet posting, plus a second CD volume of Treasures for possible release next year, this time supported by younger musicians and collaborators such as Wilco member Jeff Tweedy. "Mainly younger players who are more sympathetic with traditional music," the singer said. "Our motivation is to keep the folk heritage going."

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 12

A lunar alignment to Mars can make for a rough start to this day. Drive with care. Be more diplomatic. Give others plenty of space. Storm clouds move out by 9:00 a.m., and the remainder of the day rates high for getting things done. New starts in your business or personal life are recommended.

THURSDAY, JUNE 13

This is a wonderful day to tackle projects around your home, like making major improvements, purchasing appliances or spending extra time in the kitchen or garden. Today's influences are also favorable for initiating the purchase or sale of land or property. The Cancer moon aligns with Venus at 5:44 p.m. and becomes inactive. A Leo moon takes over at 7:39 p.m., setting the stage for a fun evening.

FRIDAY, JUNE 14

It may be difficult to focus on work projects today. Be sure to have a clear plan of action, if you must be productive. The moon travels in playful Leo and opposes Neptune at 2:17 p.m. On the other hand, all creative and artistic endeavors get the green light. Planetary influences may spark new ideas and fresh inspiration. Venus also enters Leo at 4:16 p.m., remaining there until July 10. The evening is prime for social or romantic activities.

SATURDAY, JUNE 15

A Leo moon continues to generate an upbeat mood. Plan to get work projects out of the way before 1:55 p.m., when the sun and moon align. A lunar opposition to Uranus may disrupt the flow of the evening. Avoid rigid time schedules. Spur of the moment ideas can be the most successful. The Leo moon becomes inactive at 9:17 p.m. until 11:23 p.m., when it enters Virgo.

SUNDAY, JUNE 16

Organization and efficiency become principal themes today and tomorrow, as the moon travels in practical Virgo. Tackle jobs you have been putting off and get them out of the way. Others may be feeling stressed out, anxious. Compliments will work better than criticism. Repay debts, fulfill promises. Keep your mind and hands busy.

MONDAY, JUNE 17

A lunar alignment to Saturn can make for a challenging morning. Sidestep worries, fears, self-doubts; focus on the positives. The best way to channel this energy is to plan a busy schedule. You can be most productive. Get back on track with diets and physical fitness programs. Eat light foods and avoid stimulants. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 8:29 p.m., when the Virgo moon becomes inactive. A lunar eclipse/full moon is building and will culminate next Monday, June 24.

TUESDAY, JUNE 18

The moon enters Libra at 2:11 a.m. It forms harmonious contacts to Venus and Mercury this morning and Neptune this evening. That means that this day is ideal for all sorts of people-related activities. The green light for new beginnings is on, particularly in your personal life. Plan a lunch date with friends and colleagues. Initiate new relationships, make new acquaintances. Chat, surf, network. Love is the name of the game this evening.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 19

A Libra moon continues to place the focus on relationship matters. In addition, applying alignments of the sun/Uranus and Mercury/Venus affect the day. Influences continue to top the charts for launching new activities, making decisions and promoting your ideas. Keep an open mind. Go with your first impression. Don't be a hermit tonight. Gather with friends and enjoy the good things in life.

History books all set

Will be shipped to town next week

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

There's nothing like a little delay to increase anticipation.

So the fact the third volume of Cohasset's town history is a few days late is only adding to the excitement of the new book that promises to be chockablock with facts, photos and maps about the past 50 years.

"We're excited about it, it's been a labor of love."

— Wigmore Pierson, history book committee

"It has 430 pages, 250 photos — 50 in color, — four, color maps; it's a work of artistry my dear friends," book committee chairman Wigmore Pierson told selectmen Tuesday.

Pierson explained some technical problems held the book up two weeks and joked the book would arrive soon "with state trooper escort."

A book signing with author Jackie Dormizter is planned for 11 a.m.-1 p.m., Saturday June 29, at the American Legion post on Summer Street.

"We're excited about it, it's been a labor of love," Pierson said about the committee that took up the charge of compiling the third volume of town history back in January 1997.

Volunteers are key to success

A cold wind carrying the sounds of music and the scent of popcorn blew steadily across Cohasset this weekend. Those familiar with the community event knew that it marked the return of the 47th annual Festival on the Common.

The three-day event encircled the First Parish Meeting House and marked the culmination of months of preparations.

"We start doing actual work towards the festival in October," said Diane Kennedy, festival coordinator. "That's when we start sending out brochures to potential exhibitors."

The festival is put together and run largely by a group of about 150 volunteers working in league with the event's sponsor, The South Shore Art Center.

"The many volunteers are absolutely essential to the festival's success,"

Neighbors don't want big house to block ocean view

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Noted American architect Royal Barry Wills, whose specialty was designing small houses, would be out of fashion today as big houses are becoming the norm.

In fact one of Wills' houses at 419 Jerusalem Road could succumb to the wrecking ball if its owners have their way.

Lisa and Leonard Kupsc want to raze the Royal Barry Wills colonial, which looks like a ranch from the street, and replace it with a much larger and taller, shingle-style home that their architect says would blend with other grand homes along the so-called Cohasset gold coast.

The Kupscs' architect Jim Sandell said the site, which is on the ocean side of Jerusalem Road across from Deep Run, has spectacular, panoramic views of both Minot Light and the Boston skyline.

What is planned is a new structure with a very classic style that would fit in and look like it has already been there, he said.

"You move to or near the ocean for the effect of the ocean. Otherwise you might as well move inland."

— Robert Rechner, 401 Jerusalem Road

However, abutters to the property say they value their views, which they claim would be obstructed or partially obstructed by the new house that would be higher and more "voluminous" than the existing structure.

They claim loss of ocean view would hurt their property values.

"You move to or near the ocean for the effect of the ocean," said Robert Rechner, 401 Jerusalem Road. "Otherwise you might as well move inland."

The Kupscs have applied for a special permit from the Zoning Board of Appeals to expand a nonconforming use because the existing house, which was built in 1960, doesn't meet side setback requirements. The new 5,800-square-foot house, that would have a second floor and hip roof, would fit within the existing footprint. A new garage, that would face the proposed courtyard in front of the house, would also be added.

But Zoning Board of Appeals member Ben Lacy said a variance might be required. According to his reading of the bylaw, if a house is razed it could lose its grand-

Abutter wants to tame Red Lion Inn complex

Planning Board takes issue up again June 26

By Evan Schiff and Mary Ford
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

For close to 300 years, the Red Lion Inn has stood in the village. It's had many owners since 1704 and no doubt has seen countless changes to South Main Street in its storied history.

But few changes can compare to those at the inn itself.

For several years before Gerd Ordelheide, the inn's current owner, made a substantial investment in the site — the venerable old inn was looking increasingly dilapidated and unloved, with few giving it much chance to survive.

Thanks to Ordelheide, the "old" inn became history with a new luxury complex has taken its place.

The Red Lion with its inn, restaurant, Lilac House, bar and barn, is now a thriving establishment that attracts innumerable weddings and other functions.

But while the town benefits from having a viable business — no one has been more profoundly affected by the inn's expansion than Michael and Rena Karp, who live next door, at 91 South Main St.

The Karps and Red Lion Inn have both sent letters to the Mariner this spring, with one side saying the inn has not been a good neighbor, and the other side saying it has.

The Karps say no one is holding the Inn's "feet to the fire," so to speak, to make the establishment live up to conditions spelled out by the Zoning Board of Appeals, which issued a special permit for the project.

To that end Michael Karp was back before the Planning Board last week for an informal discussion.

"I've been here for years outlining the problems we've had with the Red Lion and nothing has been done," he said. "We just want to see some changes."

Due to a miscommunication, the Planning Board did not think the Karps could make last week's meeting. So the Red Lion Inn is on the Planning Board's June 26 agenda when the board hopes to meet with both sides to resolve any outstanding issues regarding the current "as-built" plans. As-built plans show was has actually been built as compared with what was proposed on the site plan. For example, a parking lot with 20 spaces laid out is on the original plan with landscaping, but the lot is pea-stone, according to Building Inspector Bob Egan.

It is not clear if the inn's expansion plans that would add an additional 36 rooms will also be discussed informally at next week's Planning Board

School Committee, 7:30 p.m., June 20 at the high school library

Water Commission, 7:30 p.m., June 20 at the King Street plant

Planning Board, 7:30 p.m., June 26 at Town Hall

Sewer Commission, 6 p.m., July 1 at Town Hall

Committee vacancies

Vacancies currently exist on the Cultural Council, Council of Elder Affairs, Harbor Committee and Drug and Alcohol Committee. Anyone interested in serving on one of those committees, should contact the selectmen's office at 781-383-4105, or stop by the office on the second floor of Town Hall.

Reprint bylaws

Zoning Board of Appeals Chairman Woody Chittick thinks it's time to undertake a full-scale reprinting of Town's bylaws. He said the last revision was done in November 1995.

"In the intervening years six-plus years, we've had many, many amendments and additions," he wrote to selectmen. "Recently we've had cases where applicants are applying for relief (or are challenging decisions) based on outmoded wording."

Chittick said his personal copy of the bylaws has some 30 annotations and taped-in excerpts from various town meetings.

"I'm not certain I've captured all changes from March 1996 forward," he said.

Chittick said zoning board members also find themselves in the awkward position of correcting each other, based on whose booklet is the most up-to-date for a particular section.

"And of course, this does not address Town Counsel's critical need to reference a definitive version when rendering opinions and preparing litigation."

Selectmen said Tuesday they support Chittick's request. Town Manager Mark Haddad said reprinting the bylaws would cost "maybe $1,000." Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan suggested Chittick review the draft before it's printed.

Making water bills more user-friendly

The Cohasset Water Commission is looking for public comment on how to improve their water bills.

"We want to see how to make our water bills more informative, more useful, and more user-friendly," said chairman John McNabb.

The Water Commission is looking for any and all comments from their customers on how their bills can be improved, including suggestions on what additional information needs to be in the bill, how to make the bills easier to read and to understand, and any other ideas that Cohasset residents may have.

Cohasset residents are invited to send their suggestions, in writing, to the Water Commission no later than June 30. Comments may be faxed to the Water Department at 781-383-2906, mailed to 339 King St., Cohasset, or emailed to McNabb at mcnabbj@mindspring.com.

Tree chairman

Virginia A. Norman, 26 Atlantic Ave., is the new chairman of the Tree Advisory Committee of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset. Norman will serve in the post for two years.

Outgoing chairman Phyllis Peck, 63 Windy Hill Road, said she has enjoyed working with Town Manager Mark Haddad and the selectmen for the past two years.

"I know you will enjoy working with Ginny," Peck wrote in a letter to Haddad.

Train ombudsman

The town will hire an ombudsman to look out for the town's best interests during construction of the Greenbush Line that could get underway next spring. As part of the town's mitigation agreement with the MBTA, Cohasset has $200,000 to pay for the position that would be contracted out.

Town Manager Mark Haddad will write a job description so the position can be advertised. He explained Town Meeting would have to appropriate the money that would be reimbursed by the MBTA.

Village, flood projects

Selectmen are considering awarding the contract for both the village revitalization and James Brook flood control projects to the same company, Waterfield Group of Winchester. While they agreed to hire Waterfield for the village, they held off on the flood control contract to see if Town Manager Mark Haddad can negotiate any economies of scale since the same company would do both projects.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris wasn't comfortable with having the same company do both, but Selectman Merle Brown said it didn't make sense to do otherwise.

Brown was particularly vocal about the pluses of having one company over both projects because the projects are somewhat intertwined. Drainage in the village is part of the flood control project.

The village revitalization is being paid for by a $1.5 million state grant and the James Brook project will cost about $1 million, which will be reimbursed by the MBTA as part of the town's mitigation agreement on the Greenbush project. Because the projects were offered through Request for Proposals, and not put out to bid, the town can negotiate the price.

Retirement incentive

Selectmen are grappling with the issue of offering an early retirement incentive, under a new state program, to eligible employees in town. There are two firefighters, who are interested in retiring, according to Jay Fiori, head of the firefighters union. The town could save money if the firefighters retired because paramedics would be hired to replace them. More paramedics means less reliance on the paramedic service offered by South Shore Hospital – less reliance on that service is not only good for the town but increases revenue. If Cohasset runs basic life support and South Shore's paramedics come, the money for the ambulance run goes to South Shore Hospital and not the town, Fiori said.

The incentive that adds five years of to their length of service and five years of age is offered in order of seniority and the next in line after the firefighter is a police officer.

Town Manager Mark Haddad suggested selectmen only offer the incentive to the firefighter, who is now first on the list. If the police officer, who is second on the list, were to opt to retire, it would cost the town money in overtime, Haddad said. The department has three new officers who will attend the police academy in the fall, which means other officers will fill their shifts on overtime. Adding a fourth new police officer, to replace the one who wants to retire early, would present a huge liability, Haddad said.

Selectmen are mulling the matter over and will revisit it at their July 9 meeting.

Open July 5

Town Hall will be open as usual on Friday, July 5. Friday hours are 8:30 a.m.-1 p.m.

Tunnel team hosts train get-together in Hingham

Square stores worry about the bottom line

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It started out as a host's worst fear: The table was set for a dozen people and about 60 showed up.

And although there was plenty of coffee, sweet rolls and Danish pastry on hand — few of the guests had an appetite for breakfast as they prepared to hear "tunnel talk."

"It's very appropriate to hold the meeting in a church," said rail-bed abutter Ann Collins of 166 North St., as she arrived. "I'm hoping that some miracle can stop the train."

Representatives from the MBTA, Cashman Construction, and the design firm STV Inc. hosted a workshop last Friday morning at the St Paul School gym off Fearing Road to put a face on the team that will design and build the $40 million tunnel that will run some 800 feet under the square.

Although the meeting was open to anyone, the agenda was targeted to those who will be most affected during tunnel construction.

"There's no doubt about it, this is a serious piece of construction," said Will Spielvogel, project manager for Cashman Construction that will build the train infrastructure for the restoration of the Greenbush Line from Weymouth to Scituate. "It's not deep or wide, but it is a narrow corridor. It's going to take a lot of coordination with you folks."

Some buildings in the Square, several of which date back 100 years or more, are only feet from the tracks. Coming from Weymouth, the 800-foot gradual slope to the 40-foot-deep tunnel will start near West Street, a stone's throw from the entrance to the South Shore Country Club. The west portal to the tunnel will be near Walsh & Packard and the east portal will be off South Street past Buttonwood, where a southbound train would gradually climb for 800 feet reaching at-grade near Water Street. Construction is expected to start next March at the latest. It's not clear how long tunnel construction will take.

The crowd demanded the speakers use the microphone, and Tom Carroll, who is community liaison for Cashman, left briefly to find some Scotch tape so the tunnel map that had been lying on the table could be put up on a portable school blackboard in the gym for everyone to see. Organizers had imagined a small group powwow around the table that had about 12 chairs. However, there were extra chairs stacked up in the gym so everyone, who wanted to, could take a seat.

> "How are we going to continue our businesses? What if people won't come?"
> — Annette Bithoney, Annette's Hair Salon

Spielvogel briefly went over engineering and construction decisions, such as whether the "slurry wall" method would be used. Apart from "goo" and "messy," the words he used to describe the slurry itself and other alternatives to dig and install a "cut and cover" tunnel went over nearly everyone's head.

But what was of paramount concern to the merchants and business people in attendance was how they will be able to keep their doors open when the backhoes come to town.

Annette Bithoney of Annette's Hair Salon, 93 South St., said the type of tunnel construction is not what she's concerned about.

"Who will want to come to our businesses?" she asked. "How are we going to continue our businesses? What if people won't come?"

Spielvogel explained the construction team that opened an office in Weymouth's Jackson Square last week, will have a Web site and 24-hour hotline, will not be turning "our shoulder" to the concerns of those affected by the construction.

He and Mark Pelletier of STV, Inc., the design firm, touted the benefits of the "design-build" method that means the project can be designed as it goes along. So far only 15 percent of the design is complete, which gives the team a lot of flexibility. Spielvogel, who explained Cashman built a tunnel in the heart of Boston's North End as part of the "Big Dig," said design-build also allows abutters to be involved early in the process. The construction-design team of Cashman Balfour Beatty (a joint venture that was awarded the $252 million Greenbush construction contract in April) and STV Inc. have been on the job about eight weeks.

"We're here to introduce ourselves and find out what the issues are," Pelletier said.

He said issues such as, exhaust analysis, ventilation, and emergency stairs have not yet been worked out.

Harry Shaw, an accountant with an office on Station Street, asked about using the Station Street parking lot as a staging area.

"We'll put a construction staging plan together and try to maximize parking as best we can," Spielvogel said. "The page is open right now on how to create the most effective plan to work with."

The audience was told that traffic would be closed in certain areas for short periods of time, an issue that was of great concern to the merchants.

Spielvogel said if traffic was maintained all the time, then it would take two-to-three times as long to get through the street; if they can work 24 hours, for example, they can get the work done in half the time.

Patty Kane of The Square Café asked if businesses had to close down, how would they be compensated.

Speilvogel said no businesses would have to close.

"We've never closed down a business, we keep them up and running and work with the people," he said.

Carroll, the community liaison for Cashman, described the construction team and businesses as "partners."

"My job is to let you know what is going on," he said. "You can go on living life during construction."

Bob Falvey of Bel Air Road praised the construction team for wanting to be flexible but said Town Hall has to be in the loop.

"You're saying 'whatever Joe wants, he'll get,' but that could be chaos unless there is some government control," he said.

The Cashman team and the MBTA had set the goal for the meeting as setting up an abutters' committee.

But as it turns out, Hingham has a coordinated team in place that includes the Hingham Industrial Development Commission that has been looking at how best to use the tunnel cap and enhance the Station Street area post construction, the public safety committee, Town Administrator Charles Cristello and the selectmen, and town Greenbush coordinator Alexander Macmillan.

Hingham Selectman Mathew MacIver told those in attendance a meeting with representatives from the town groups and the Cashman team would be set up this week.

"This is new to a number of us," MacIver said. "We will work with Town Hall to set up an organizational structure so all of us can work together."

Macmillan said the town has laid a lot of the groundwork in anticipation of the train that will also include the complex process of working with the utilities.

"We have some ideas about how to work effectively, how to keep everyone informed and give everyone the chance to have input," Macmillan said after the meeting.

"Our feeling is we've been ready for sometime but (the train) didn't have this group of people in place," he said, pointing out the contract for construction was awarded this spring.

Although the merchants seemed pleased with efforts to communicate, they cannot afford to lose business.

Ellen Nally Brown of Hingham Greenery of South Street, which "is right in the middle of everything," she said, is concerned about potential loss of revenue.

"The response from Cashman has been great," she said. "But my concern is how much will this affect my bottom line."

History books all set

that features an aerial photograph of the town. He also displayed the green hardcover that matches those for the town's two prior histories.

"Wait till you see what's between the covers," Hamilton said. He said the book is printed, the covers are stamped and ready to go, and the pages are being collated and sewn this week.

Shipping will start Tuesday, he said.

Thanks to the new town history, interest has picked up in the two previous volumes, the history from 1900-1950 by Burt Pratt, and Bigelow's history that covers the glacial period to 1900.

Hamilton explained those books could be reprinted in smaller lots using a scanning method (not offset printing) that would be relatively inexpensive. The finished product would look virtually the same.

Plans are to reprint the two prior volumes with a new preamble and dust jackets for a total cost of less than $5,000.

Proceeds from the sale of the new books would be used to print the old books.

The town appropriated a total of $65,000 for the new history. Pierson said the committee still has $500 of that original amount, and from contributions and book presales they have $40,000 on hand.

There is also a move afoot to incorporate the town history into the school curriculum. History book committee member Lou Harvey said he was working with curriculum director Ruth Fennessey on that program.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said he remembered when the first discussions about the new town history took place.

"It's fabulous you all stuck with it and got the final result," he said. "Thank you for your effort."

Pierson said the committee would be back before selectmen in July with the books.

Neighbors don't want big house to block ocean view

fathered status as "preexisting, non-conforming."

The tests for zoning relief for a variance are much more difficult to meet than those for special permits. Among other conditions, the applicant must show substantial hardship if zoning relief weren't granted.

"The point of (this section of the bylaw) is someone has to have an existing building to add onto," Lacy explained. He said plans to leave part of the existing foundation "may not be enough" to qualify.

Malcolm Onwood, 404 Jerusalem Road, said Royal Barry Wills designed houses in the area, so they would all have a view of the sea. He said when neighbors have added on, they've tried to keep their additions low so the surrounding homes maintain their view and value.

According to the assessors' office, 419 Jerusalem Road has a total value of $1,284,500 with the existing house valued at $412,000. The lot is 30,100 square feet or about two-thirds of an acre.

Attorney John Amendolare, representing Richard and Kathy Sears, 17 Deep Run, said he will research the potential of restrictive covenants at the site. There was some discussion that Royal Barry Wills may have placed a restriction on the property at one time.

Richard Sears said he has a clear view of Massachusetts Bay, 75-80 percent of which would be taken away by the proposed house.

"There would be an economic detrimental effect to my property as well," he said.

Sears said he doesn't care about the type of house that is built there as long as "it is not taller and more voluminous than the current structure is."

The Zoning Board also told Sandell, the architect, the height of the house is measured from the existing topography. Although the zoning bylaw doesn't spell that out, the board has consistently measured height that way. Sandell, who said plans are to add fill at the front of the house for the courtyard, which will house a state-of-the-art septic system, took the height measurements from the courtyard that is a few feet higher than the existing grade. Although specific height measurements weren't clear at the Zoning Board hearing Monday, board members thought the roof might be a foot or so over the height limit. The bylaw limits height to 35 feet but the consensus of the board was the height issue was "resolvable."

But chairman Woody Chittick said detrimentally of the increased height to the neighbors is one major issue that has to be considered.

Sandell described the house, which is in poor condition, as "not one of Royal Barry Wills' finest projects." He said the house did not have historical value and the proposed house would not be detrimental to Jerusalem Road.

He also said the proposed house would not be blocking, but adding to the view.

The Zoning Board may seek Town Counsel's help to determine if razing the house cancels out the preexisting non-conforming use, and puts the applicant in a "variance situation."

The board continued the hearing until July 15.

Chittick said board members have a lot to think about.

"I suggest any restrictive covenants out there be uncovered," he said.

meeting.

Planning Board Chairman Al Moore is confident the inn and Karps will be able to live together.

The Karps' complaints concern both noise and lighting. For example, there is a large construction-style light on a tree, which shines into their house.

There aren't enough trees screening the inn, said Michael Karp, adding car lights and the reflection of the sun off of vehicles continually disrupts his home.

"It's very bothersome and it does affect us," Karp said. "We see everything through that fence. We appreciate everything he's done but it's just not enough."

The Karps have also complained about boisterous guests in the parking lot late at night.

The Feb. 7, 2000 Zoning Board decision spells out five conditions of the special permit including lighting in the on-site parking area being kept to the minimum height and intensity, and installation of a six-foot fence and non-deciduous shrubbery to shield residential abutters from headlight glare.

The decision also talks about the noise of patrons leaving late at night as a concern, setting a midnight curfew entertainment and music.

Moore said he understands some of the problems such as plantings and paving the driveway could not have been fixed in the winter but feels now is the time to attack them.

"The board is running out of patience," he said. "It's time to get a move on."

Egan, the building inspector, said a three-bay carport would serve to screen the Karp's home from the Inn.

"We've only just talked about it but it's something that may be worth looking into," Egan said. "It could help everyone out."

Egan explained this week the inn has to construct a shed for irrigation pumps at the site, so constructing a carport for three cars might help solve the problem, in addition to providing more parking. The carport would have to go before the Planning Board because it is not in the original plans, he said.

Karp also mentioned his concern with delivery trucks parking in front of his driveway on South Main Street. He said the dust the trucks kick up, along with noise, is very bothersome.

"It's a heavy residential neighborhood and it's not safe for those big trucks to be pulling in and out like that," he said.

However, Moore said the Planning Board does not have authority over parking enforcement.

"That's more of a police or selectmen issue," Moore said. "But there are some other very real issues here and we can put pressure on the Inn to correct."

A public hearing before the Board of Selectmen on Tuesday to alter the inn's liquor license was postponed because abutters had not been notified as required. The inn wants add tables to a room near the bar and put some tables outside, according to reports.

Art center eyes Hagerty House

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Hagerty House on Parker Avenue is a step closer to having a tenant.

The Cohasset Center for Student Coastal Research, formerly called the Coastal Maritime Institute, is pursuing the building and may have a fellow occupant.

According to Sarah Hannan, the executive director of the South Shore Art Center, if the selectmen were to approve the art center's proposal, it would lease the second and third floors of the property as artist studio space. She said the estimated $1200 a month the art center would pay could be used toward building renovations and upkeep.

"Artists are always asking us if we have an available studio space and currently, we don't," Hannan said. "This is a beautiful space that we thought we could use."

She continued to say the center would look forward to providing space to artists and faculty to enhance the cultural growth of the community. She said the coastal location would be ideal for landscape painters, sculptors, printmakers and environmental artists.

Jack Buckley, head of the student research center proposed for the Hagerty House, approached the art center months ago inquiring if it would be interested.

"Buckley came to us with the idea and we thought it could work," Hannan said. "They didn't need the entire building and thought a collaborative effort could work better."

Stephen Bobo said the art center's proposal could help move plans for a research center at the site forward, and then both groups could benefit. Bobo has been a supporter of a student research center at the Hagerty House from when the idea first came forward as the Lobster Lab.

Bobo, who is chairman of the Board of Health, recently served as emcee at a special CHS student presentation on water quality in town. Efforts that he points out are paying off in important ways.

"As students become more proficient in their monitoring efforts, the quality of their work improves and becomes more reliable," he said. "This year's presentation of student volunteers' reports to the town have been or will be used in grant requests totaling $150,000."

Bobo said if Hagerty House space was made available, the high school would also benefit. He said there would be reduced pressure on the school to provide science electives, teachers would have a venue in town in which to continuing summer education classes, and the town will receive data of vital importance to maintaining its state mandated environmental goals.

"These will all be available through a self-sustaining organism without requiring support from taxpayers," he said.

In March, Buckley outlined for selectmen the efforts the center has made to be suitable tenants in the space. He said the organization has worked with students who created harbor study reports.

"This represents our model in action, collecting, analyzing, reporting, and presenting quality data to the town," Buckley wrote in a letter to the Mariner. "This is the primary purpose of utilizing the Hagerty building as an educational facility."

The center has also secured various grants and equipment, including 12 computers for its initiative

But Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan, who was initially lukewarm to Buckley's proposal, said he still had some questions for the research center.

"There are a lot of things we need to consider here," Sullivan said. "There's the parking issue, renovations that need to be done and I still wonder how it's going to be sustained?"

The Hagerty property has been in limbo for some time. The site was leased to the Lobster Lab, which was unable to realize its potential in the space. Selectmen recently terminated the Lab's lease of the building because the non-profit organization did not meet the conditions of the lease in terms of building upkeep and fund-raising.

POLITICAL NOTES

Palmer says voters worry about rising cost of retirement

Nathaniel Palmer, candidate for state representative of the Third Plymouth district, spent the week visiting with voters within the communities of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

"It is great to meet with so many supportive voters, who share my goal for restoring balance on Beacon Hill," says Palmer. "Throughout the week we met with a number of families, business owners, and retirees who expressed their support for our campaign."

Of particular interest among the voters is the rising cost of retirement, an issue compounded by raising taxes on both the state and local level.

"We are seeing the impact of a vicious cycle emerging from the State's failure to make good on past commitments, such as local aid and school building assistance, resulting in higher property taxes to fund local initiatives," Palmer says. "Unfortunately this hits hardest those who can least afford it, yet to make matters worse Beacon Hill has laid at the foot of seniors one of the largest and most progressive tax increases in history."

A recent tax increase passed in the House and Senate budgets directly targets seniors on fixed-incomes who live in private nursing homes is expected to cost each senior an average of $3,300 per year.

"This is one of worst yet examples of what happens with an out of balance political process, dominated by a single ruling party," Palmer says. "The additional tax burden will consume a large portion of what little money that is left, for many seniors who spend the majority of their fixed incomes on housing and medical expenses. What's worse, it will likely force many into the Medicaid program, further compounding the problem it was intended to address."

Choices for local elderly citizens

State Representative Bradley announces the House of Representatives included a new initiative in the Fiscal Year 2003 budget called "Community Choices," which will provide elders at imminent risk of nursing home placement with an enhanced package of services designed to keep them living independently in the community. The "choices" amendment gives elders more of a realistic choice of remaining at home.

For the first time, elders will be able to get up to 50 percent of the median monthly per capita cost of a nursing home, which comes to $1,512 a month. Currently, such community services are averaging around $507 per month, so the new program triples how much an elder could expect to receive-but is still only half the cost of a nursing home. Community services will include such care as homemakers, home health aides and nursing services, day care, personal care attendant, transportation, and other priority services.

"Community Choices" will affect seniors on Medicaid who are close to entering a nursing home, but who could be diverted to the community instead.

Van donated to Sailing Club

Peter Capozzoli, owner of Cohasset Imports, recently made the largest in-kind gift to the Cohasset Sailing Club in the club's 40-year history, by donating a late-model Ford Windstar van to be used by the sailing club's racing team.

In past years the club has jury-rigged arrangements to transport its sailors to regattas. "This extraordinary contribution truly energizes our racing program," says Commodore Bob Deutsch. "Our teenage sailors are the big winners. Peter's generosity makes the clubís overall effort more potent on the racing circuit."

Capozzoli found the contribution an easy one to make.

"We have lived in Cohasset for many years. We always thought the Sailing Club represents the essence of the Cohasset community," Capozzoli said. "When Bob approached me about the need for the van, I thought it made perfect sense to donate a vehicle that fit the need."

The van will not only serve the Sailing Club's junior racers, but will also trailer the new boats just added to the fleet of existing boats.

The van will not only serve the Sailing Club's junior racers, but will also trailer the new boats just added to the fleet of existing boats.

Cohasset Imports serves Cohasset, the South Shore, and the nation in the high quality auto market. The Capozzoli family opened the business in 1984.

Local teachers earn awards

Mr. Shultz receives top honors

Several Cohasset teachers were honored with awards at the recent Plymouth County Educators' Association Annual Awards Banquet. The PCEA is an organization of teachers from 25 communities around the Plymouth County area. Its mission is to provide professional development opportunities to teachers and to recognize the accomplishments of outstanding teachers.

Mr. Shultz was honored for his many contributions to education in Cohasset.

At the recent banquet Deer Hill teacher Larry Schultz received the highest honor bestowed by the PCEA, the Loretta Quinlan Award. Mr. Schultz was chosen as this year's PCEA member who best exemplifies the association's objectives of excellence, leadership, and service to the teaching profession, the association, and the community. In honor of this award Mr. Schultz will have the privilege of bestowing the PCEA's $2,000 college scholarship upon a deserving Cohasset High School student graduating in June, 2002.

Larry Schultz received the highest honor from the PCEA.

As a prerequisite to winning the Loretta Quinlan Award, Mr. Schultz received a Citation Award for his outstanding service to the teaching profession, the association, and the community. He was honored for his many contributions to education in Cohasset. Some examples of his leadership and excellence cited include: his enthusiasm and passion for teaching, the time and effort he has devoted to outdoor education programs like Camp Bournedale, the math enrichment programs he has developed such as Deer Hill's team in the New England Math League, his committee work on behalf of his colleagues in order to improve their work environment and conditions, and his many years of contributions to youth sports programs in Cohasset. In addition, Mr. Schultz earned a Professional Service Award for his 35 years of service as a teacher and a Retirement Certificate. Mr. Schultz was accompanied to the Awards Banquet by family, friends, colleagues who were eager to extend their congratulations for this well-deserved honor.

Also receiving a Citation Award was Joseph Osgood teacher Elizabeth Owens-Rigby. Mrs. Owens-Rigby was honored for her excellence in teaching and differentiating instruction. Other areas noted in her award were her leadership in curriculum development, committee work, support for her colleagues, and mentoring new teachers. Finally, she was recognized for her community service work, such as directing her students in a used book drive that provided over 2,000 books to needy children.

Osgood teacher Susan Baush, who is retiring, is recognized during CHS commencement June 8. Baush was also honored recently by the Plymouth County Educators' Association.

Cohasset High School teachers Ed Leary and Joe Federico each won an Honor Award for significant service to the teaching profession and both were recognized for their teaching service as they retire from the profession.

Several other teachers were recognized with awards:

〈 Cohasset High School Teacher Joe Bouchard received the Professional Service Award for 35 years of teaching.

〈 Cohasset High School teacher Paul Hogan received a Retirement Certificate.

• Cohasset High School teacher Paul Narkiewicz received the Distinguished Professional Service Award in recognition of forty years of teaching.

〈 Deer Hill/Osgood teacher Jack MacInnis and Deer Hill teachers Joan Cassiani and Ray Levine were recognized for their thirty years of teaching.

〈 Osgood teacher Sue Baush received the Professional Service Award for 35 years of teaching and a Retirement Certificate.

The teachers who received these honors were both humbled and gratified to be recognized by their colleagues. Mr. Schultz was particularly surprised by the magnitude of the award he received and said "I could never receive a greater honor than being recognized by my peers."

Many Cohasset teachers and several administrators attended the awards in order to congratulate the winners.

The noblest of professions

The last day of school, our students explode out the door of our schools like pop corn in a pop corn machine. It is also the last day of school for four retiring teachers in Cohasset. All together they represent dozens years of service to Cohasset schoolchildren.

After the children burst out the door and our teachers are left in their classrooms, alone, listening to the silence, what do they think about?

What do they think about if it is the last day of the year?

What do they think about if it is the last day of their career?

Do they realize the miracles they have performed this year, whether helping a Harvard-bound physics wizard unlock the mystery of a mind-boggling equation or nudging a struggling first-grader trying to keep up with his classmates like the last skater in the ice show line.

In either case, and all that is in between, teachers have chosen the noblest of professions.

A teacher is so much more than what a test can gauge.

A teacher is a counselor, a nurse, a healer of broken hearts.

A teacher is a police officer watching out for our children's safety.

A teacher is a locksmith unlocking a wonderful world of knowledge.

A teacher is a guide in the adventure of learning.

A teacher is a straight man, a comedian, an actor, a storyteller, a puppeteer.

A teacher is a carpenter with a bulletin board, a bookbinder with Scotch tape, a sanitation worker with the waste basket.

A teacher is a banker keeping track of lunch money, ice cream money and milk money.

A teacher is a salesman. The product is knowledge.

A teacher is a hair stylist when a pony tail falls down, a dentist when a tooth falls out, a fix-it man when the pencil sharpener falls apart.

A teacher is a waitress at snack time, a referee at recess time, a doorkeeper at dismissal time.

A teacher is a press agent, a proofreader, a peace-maker, a playmate.

A teacher is a detective searching for clues, a lawyer settling disputes, a judge making decisions.

A teacher is a coach, a caretaker, a cheerleader.

A teacher is a psychiatrist fostering self esteem, an optometrist helping children see clearly, a neurologist soothing frayed nervous systems.

A teacher is a wizard squeezing small shoes into smaller boots.

A teacher is an X-ray technician reading minds, a publisher at the Xerox machine, a partner with parents in the adventure of education.

A teacher is a miracle worker taking straight and curved lines and making them into letters, taking letters and making them into words, and taking works and making them into ideas.

A teacher must guide a guide through cyberspace making sure that students are not trapped by the computer mouse or lost in the Internet's web.

A teacher was the person with our children on that fateful Tuesday morning Sept. 11, only five days after school opened. It was a teacher who either told our youngsters of the horrific events of that terrible morning or had the burden of withholding the information until the final bell.

A teacher is the first one to take the tiny hand of the frightened kindergartner and the last one to shake the proud hand of the high school graduate.

God-bless our teachers.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Stop Avalon Bay

TO THE EDITOR:

I share with many residents of Cohasset, great concern about the future of our town given the ongoing development activity of Avalon Bay and their shameless exploitation of the Massachusetts 40B Law.

Masked as 'affordable housing' their proposed project of 254 luxury rental units would increase the number of housing units in Cohasset by 10 percent in a single blow. It would put a huge burden our infrastructure and tax our fragile water and environmental resources. Bear in mind that Cohasset has not grown that much in 30 years!

In addition, it would rezone and remove from the market, one of the last remaining large commercially viable sites, thereby depriving the town of much needed commercial tax revenue.

Avalon Bay is a very profitable, Virginia-based REIT that has come to Massachusetts to exploit a well-intentioned but poorly written state law enabling them to increase profits and influence throughout the state to the detriment of the communities they develop in.

I would like suggest that those reading this consider three things:

1. Contact your state reps: Garrett Bradley and Bob Hedlund to let them know that the Avalon project is a dangerous exploitation of a well-intentioned, but poorly written law (40B) that will damage Cohasset irreversibly and needs immediate attention.

2. Bring forward to town management, relevant, realistic and sustainable affordable housing options (especially senior housing) that truly meet town needs, not just profit targets.

3. Let me know if you, or anyone you know is interested in joining a concerned citizens group to do whatever is necessary to stop Avalon and get Cohasset the real kind of affordable housing it truly needs.

Support of gala event appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

The Social Service League of Cohasset would like to extend our sincere thanks to all those who helped make our 90th Anniversary Gala a complete success and a truly wonderful evening. We would like to mention the generous management and staff at the Atlantica Restaurant that provided a wonderful atmosphere that contributed to a festive night enjoyed by a wide cross section of not only the Cohasset community, but also the surrounding towns.

To all those who attended and to all those who could not, but sent a donation in lieu of your presence, we are extremely grateful for your support to enable us to continue to offer services and programs to the community at large. Also, I would be remiss if I did not thank all the volunteers on the board of trustees who worked behind the scenes for months to organize our special evening on May 3. This evening was a testament to a town contributing and working together to improve the social health of their own community.

And we at the Social Service League, plan to work diligently to provide whatever services and programs we can offer to continue our legacy of helping those in need.

Renew CHS band leader's contract

TO THE EDITOR:

I gather from the students' letter last week that Band Director Greg Lessard's contract is not being renewed because he wants rehearsal time for the Middle/High School Band during the school day, rather than after school. Students are now lobbying to have music scheduled as part of the core curriculum.

Principal Michael Jones claims he is committed to the band and the music program as a whole. However, in treating music as extracurricular his actions do not support his words. He apparently views music not only as unrelated to the real business of schooling, which is perceived by many as getting high SAT scores and entry into good colleges, but unworthy of respect as the major educational discipline it is.

For the past 12 years I have been studying the impact education in and through the arts (music, visual arts, theatre, dance and creative writing) has on student development. There is solid evidence that arts education improves students' academic learning. Additionally, when treated as serious disciplines in their own right the arts create a school-wide culture of high standards — in behavior, and achievement, for teachers as well as students. .

The arts reach out to students' multiple intelligences. Michael Jones is encouraged to support, through his scheduling practices, the Linguistic, and Logical-Mathematical intelligences, because that is what passing the MCAS requires. Yet Harvard's Howard Gardner has identified five others — Visual/Spatial, Musical, Bodily-Kinesthetic, and Personal Intelligences, both sense of self, and awareness of others, or Interpersonal Intelligence —all of which are served by the arts. It is impossible to educate the whole person without serious, focussed attention on arts instruction as part of the core curriculum.

The arts build intellectual character, those habits of discipline and mind which carry over beyond the formal school experience to help kids succeed in life. Intellectual character is dependent, not on innate cognitive ability, but on learning dispositions, or patterns of behavior. How a student goes about learning, and how teachers teach, is more important than innate ability. In offering a dispositional view of intelligence, rather than an abilities based view, Harvard's Ron Ritchhart identifies six dispositions as central to intelligence. He believes a person must be curious, open minded, reflective, strategic, and should search for truth and understanding.

All of these dispositions are fostered through practice in the arts, taught as serious disciplines to high standards. Cultivating these habits of mind prepares one for a lifetime of learning, problem solving and decision making.

Thanks to student lobbying, Dr. Jones, as well as the Superintendent and the School Board now have an opportunity to reconsider their position on arts instruction. Rather than being treated as extracurricular, the arts should become part of the Master Schedule, from kindergarten through 12th grade, taught by qualified professionals like Greg Lessard. Renewing his contract can be a start to bringing Cohasset's schools to a new level of excellence.

Yet the School Committee, headed by Chairman Rick Flynn, suggests that this decision is not within its jurisdiction, being primarily a policy setting Board. I respectfully suggest that this issue — providing time in the Master Schedule — is one of the most important policy decisions any Board can possibly make. It deserves the Committee's full, and careful attention. One way to address the issue is to establish a sub-committee of the Board, to gather data, review precedent, and assess the experience of other schools across the country. I would be happy to assist this effort in any way I can.

The Norwell program may offer an acceptable model. Half the kids in Norwell Middle School rehearse three or four times per week with one of three bands, by showing up — willingly and enthusiastically — at 6:30 or 7 in the morning.

In the meantime, I urge Dr. Jones to renew Mr. Lessard's contract for another year, while this issue is resolved.

Koyoto eco-nonsense

TO THE EDITOR:

The Koyoto Treaty is supposed to counter global warming by reducing the world's output of carbon dioxide, produced mostly by the burning of fossil fuels in electricity generating plants, heating plants and vehicles .

But instead of practical address to the problem, the Treaty has been contorted into a parking place for the ideological quirks of misguided and extremist environmentalists. For example, the ecocrats have inserted language requiring nations to refrain from taking credit for reduction of carbon dioxide emissions resulting from the use of nuclear energy. That's nonsensical, considering that about 15 percent of the world's electricity is generated by nuclear energy, electricity that otherwise would be generated by burning fossil fuels.

The Koyoto Treaty needs be replaced by something that is a realistic and common-sensical address to the problem of global warming, rather than a hodgepodge of such nonsense. Then maybe our Senate won't reject it again, 95 to 0, and more than 2 or 3 nations then might accept it.. Let us hope that the delegates to the next world conference on global warming are practical and knowledgeable realists, rather than idealists with a firm grip on their ideological agenda but a tenuous grasp of facts and scant interest in real solutions.

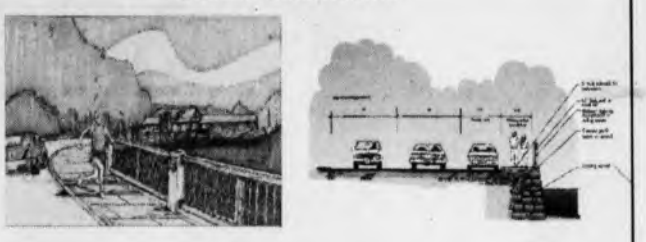
What should happen in the harbor?

MODERATE IMPROVEMENTS



Scope of Work

Moderate Improvements consist of the reconstruction and widening as necessary existing sidewalks to provide a 5' - 5'6" minimum walking area; application of a scored concrete or similar type sidewalk surface material ; installation of vertical granite curbing to clearly separate sidewalks from parallel parking ; new lighting as appropriate (removal of overhead utility lines is not currently part of this approach); tree planting; installation of new wood or steel railing system as required under Massachusetts design and safety standards to meet grant funding guidelines; and minor repairs of existing seawalls as needed.

Cost of Work

Estimated Project Costs	$ 1,129,275
Grant Funding Opportunities (May pay up to 90% of Project)	1,016,347
Private and Municipal Funding Required to Undertake Project	$ 112,928

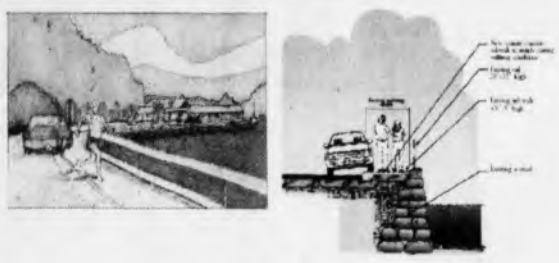
Funding Note

Since this approach effectively addresses public safety and access deficiencies it will quality for state and federal grant funding. However, there are no guarantees on the dollar amount and the time-frame in which the town could receive grant funding. If grant funding does not materialize as suggested, the Town will still have the option to adjust the project scope as deemed appropriate.

Level of Safety and Access Improvements

This approach provides the highest level of public safety and access improvements. Establishing curbs and sidewalks that control vehicle parking, installing a child-safe railing system, improving walkway lighting and enhancing the linkages among the public waterfront properties will provide long-term solutions to current infrastructure deficiencies.

MINIMUM IMPROVEMENTS



Scope of Work

Minimum Improvements consist primarily of replacing existing asphalt sidewalk surfaces (which vary in width from 3' - 4'6" depending on parking encroachments) with a new scored concrete or asphalt surface material. A rollover curbing system could be installed to separate sidewalk from parallel parking, though vehicles would still be allowed to park on the sidewalks in certain areas along Border Street. No lighting, railing, sidewalk width or road width changes are incorporated in this approach.

Cost of Work

Estimated Project Costs	$ 313,875
Grant Funding Opportunities	$0
Private and Municipal Funding Required to Undertake Project	$ 313,875

Funding Note

The improvements suggested under this approach do not sufficiently address public access and safety conditions in the area and would be considered a municipal maintenance project by state and federal funding agencies. Therefore, grant funding triggered by public access and pedestrian safety improvements would not be applicable under this improvement approach. The cost burden to undertake the improvements described in this approach would become the Town's responsibility.

Level of Safety and Access Improvements

This approach will improve the surface conditions of the sidewalks, but does not address safety issues associated with vehicles parking on the walkway areas, open design of the existing railing system, and broken linkages among the public waterfront properties.

NO IMPROVEMENTS

Scope of Work

The No Improvement approach will undertake no changes to the waterfront area, with the exception of new asphalt patching to fill reoccurring potholes. Existing walkway and infrastructure conditions will remain as they are today.

Cost of Work

Estimated Project Costs	$ 0
Private and Municipal Funding Required to Undertake Project	$ 0

Funding Note

Since no improvements are implemented under this approach there is no short-term cost to the Town.

Level of Safety and Access Improvements

This approach does not address safety issues associated with irregular and narrow sidewalk surfaces, vehicles parking on walkway areas, open design of the existing railing system and general infrastructure disrepair within the waterfront area.

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation is sponsoring a public planning process to help the community address public infrastructure, safety and access deficiencies around the harbor area, CRC director Dean Rizzo said.

"The CRC believes that implementing walkway improvements to establish clear delineation between walking, biking, parking and vehicle travel will create a safer and more accessible environment for all users in the waterfront area," Rizzo said.

To that end, and after community review and comment, the CRC has identified three distinct walkway improvement approaches for consideration by the town. The Summary of Proposed Improvement Approaches shown here, provides a brief overview of the three opportunities under consideration, Rizzo said.

The CRC is asking residents and town officials to review each approach and vote on their preference.

The CRC is asking residents and town officials to review each approach and to vote on their preference.

If you would like to review the information and vote on the approach you feel would be in the best interests of the community, contact the CRC office at 781-383-2449 and a packet will be mailed to you. Responses should be returned by the end of June.

The results will be presented to selectmen to determine which improvement approach the CRC should help the community proceed with, Rizzo said.

Some sample questions from the survey

1. Do you support widening Margin Street at Wheelwright Landing to create a five-foot wide sidewalk with granite curbing, two 12-foot wide travel lanes, and a dedicated parking lane along the harbor side of the roadway?

2. Do you support the creation of a traffic island at the intersection of Summer and Border streets to create a safer intersection for vehicles, walkers and bikers?

3. Do you support the widening of the roadway in front of the Atlantica parking area to create a 28-foot wide travel lane for improved bicycle access, a five-foot wide sidewalk, and about seven additional parking spaces?

High-priced collectibles

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Don't tell anybody, but I have in my possession a baseball autographed by every member of the 1959 Keokuk Cardinals, a baseball team in the Class D Midwest League.

I urge you to keep quiet about it because if word got out I fear I might be besieged by a host of wild-eyed collectors seeking to press in my hot little hands enough cash to wipe out the state's budget deficit for fiscal year 2003.

Don't laugh; I tell you it's coming to that.

I thought I had seen everything until the other day when I learned that Internet bidding for three bean-size bone fragments taken from the pitching elbow of Jeff Nelson, a relief pitcher for the Seattle Mariners, had reached $23,600.

The bidding might have gone higher had the online auction firm of eBay not withdrawn them from the block, citing a policy against selling body parts.

The policy must have been discovered late in the game because only the day before, eBay had been promoting the sale with some enthusiasm — "Now is your chance to own not only a piece of the game but a piece of a player!"

The most expensive card of them all, the Holy Grail of sports collection, is a 1910 Honus Wagner...

What do you do with three bone chips taken from Jeff Nelson's elbow? Probably the same thing the collector who paid $10,000 did with the wad of chewing gum personally masticated and discarded by Luis Gonzalez of the Arizona Diamondbacks.

Before the Nelson and Gonzalez collectibles came along, I thought the most bizarre purchase was the $7,475 that Karen Shemonsky of Clarks Summit, Pa. paid for former Detroit outfielder Ty Cobb's false teeth at Sotheby's, a prominent New York auction house.

Or the $15,000 that was expected to be the top bid for one-time owner of the Cleveland Indians and Suffolk Downs Bill Veeck's wooden leg, which leads to the question inquiring minds want to know: are false teeth and wooden legs to be considered body parts?

The Veeck family protested the sale, but the seller, Brian Marren of Oak Brook, Ill., defended it, noting that Bill himself, a promoter of some repute, "would get a real kick out of it."

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth, baseball cards were the big collectibles. I distinctly remember negotiating with Bob Parlee the sale of a Billy Urbanski card for a nickel. Today, a Billy Urbanski might go for four or five figures.

For you kids who think baseball started with Nomar and Pedro, Billy Urbanski was a shortstop for the Braves while they still played in Boston.

I feel secure in my estimate of the value of a Urbanski card because an Alex Rodriguez, issued in 1994, recently went for $9,451 at auction, and a Roberto Clemente cost the successful bidder $39,999.

The most expensive card of them all, the Holy Grail of sports collection, is a 1910 Honus Wagner, which sold for $640,500 in 1996 and resold for more than a million dollars four years later.

Like I say, anybody interested in a baseball signed by every member of the 1959 Keokuk Cardinals?

Dilemma: Development or preservation of open space

NATURAL VIEW

JIM SHIPSKY

To develop or not to develop, that is the question. Building more houses in Cohasset is a thorny issue.

Several Cohasset groups exist solely to protect natural land. The Cohasset Conservation Trust, a private non-profit, was formed to preserve Cohasset's beauty by acquiring and managing natural and scenic parcels. The Open Space Advisory Committee works to advise the Town on open space policy and to select key properties most worthy of preservation. The Cohasset Conservation Commission protects wetlands from development, and owns conservation lands. A group was formed to protect unique land with granite ledge outcroppings on Beach Street. The list goes on to include The Gulf Association, Inc., The Trustees of Reservations, the Department of Environmental Management, and more.

Some individual owners want to preserve undeveloped Cohasset land. The young owners of a large wooded tract would rather sell to the Town than to a developer. Elder owners of a property near an unbuilt area would prefer selling to the Town for preservation rather than to land speculators. Numerous owners have donated land to the preservation groups listed above.

These folks obviously believe there is significant value in preserving parts of Cohasset the way God made it. They believe there is something about natural land that is vital to the wholeness of the human experience. They feel it is right to protect natural land, and by definition, wrong to develop it, at least certain natural land. A moral-ecological stance, if you will.

Joanna Macy speaks of our living in the "Time of the Great Turning." It is now as people turn from an industrial growth society toward a life-sustaining society. Joanna writes about three dimensions of this turning. The first dimension is holding actions. For land preservationists, this means struggling to protect natural land in response to immanent threats.

Cohasset now has an excellent opportunity to examine its policies of land use, having hired a planning consultant to create a master plan.

But some owners and developers want to build more houses. David Walsh wants to develop land on Beach Street. A committee of residents wants to develop a pristine nine-acre Town-owned wooded area into a senior housing project. Avalon Bay Communities is interested in building more than 200 apartments on the 60-acre former Norfolk Conveyor site. Real estate firms in Cohasset regularly offer up more unbuilt land for development. These folks argue that the land is zoned for development, that as owners it is their right to do as they wish with the land, that land development is the American way, that it will increase the tax base, etc.

Development proponents point out that that 20 percent of Cohasset land is already protected. They mention Wompatuck State Park, Whitney & Thayer Woods, Wheelwright Park, etc. and conclude that more than enough land, certainly a higher percentage than in neighboring towns, is protected. However, this ignores the questions: How much is enough? Do parks-as-tree-museums provide the nurture from nature humans need? [The question of zoning nature into parks while we do something unnatural to the rest of the land, where we live, will be the topic of a future column.]

One approach to preserving natural land is to buy it and protect it with permanent deed restrictions. Turkey Hill, part Cohasset and part Hingham, was purchased by a coalition of conservation groups. In 2001 Cohasset adopted the Community Preservation Act, taxing residents 1.5 percent to preserve land by buying it. (Among other eligible projects.) If funding is available this method works well, since it accepts existing social structures — market economics, property rights, and so on. It sidesteps the moral-ecological questions. But the discouraging limitation of this approach is obvious: neither the Town, nor state, nor preservation groups have enough money to protect more than a tiny fraction of the land they feel should be protected.

A 1999 Buildout Analysis by the Metropolitan Area Planning Council for Cohasset showed 1551 developable acres. Some feel this number is debatable. At $100,000 per one-acre house lot, that totals $151 million dollars. What I find surprising about this number is not how high it is but how low it is. I expected the number to be at least billions or trillions of dollars. If some Cohasset philanthropist wanted to do something really big for their town, rather than protect an isolated parcel or two, they could protect all undeveloped land in Cohasset with one not-so-big land trust fund. Imagine that!

If it is wrong to develop all the remaining natural land in Cohasset, then our social structures are failing us badly. Joanna's second dimension is analysis of structural causes and creation of alternative institutions. Cohasset now has an excellent opportunity to examine its policies of land use, having hired a planning consultant to create a master plan. The Growth and Development Committee survey showed very strong support for protection of natural land. It remains to be seen whether the planning consultant will deal with these issues.

The third, most basic, dimension is a fundamental shift in worldview and values. This shift occurs on all levels: intellectual, emotional, and spiritual.

"Now, in our time, these three rivers — anguish for our world, scientific breakthroughs, and ancestral teachings — flow together. From the confluence of these rivers we drink. We awaken to what we once knew: we are alive in a living Earth, source of all we are and can achieve. Despite our conditioning by the industrial society of the last two centuries, we want to name, once again, this world as holy." "Coming Back To Life, Practices to Reconnect Our Lives, Our World," by Joanna Macy and Molly Young Brown, New Society, 1998. p. 21.

Cohasset and the 18th Amendment, 1920 to 1933

By Lou Eaton
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The third volume of the Cohasset Town History is scheduled to become available soon and the Committee responsible for publication has thought to publish a few articles, courtesy of the Cohasset Mariner, about local history to stimulate interest in matters historical even though not related to the period of 1950 to 2000 covered by Volume III.

In this last of my vignettes somehow related to Cohasset History, there is one big difference between the others and this one. These are the only events that took place during my own lifetime. That makes it the only subject that I have written about that I do know something about from personal experience and observation and the only one that has people I knew as town officers during my residence in town since February 1946.

More of you, like myself, probably didn't realize that in the absence of organized sports and facilities for public amusement and recreation, the use of intoxicants in this country during the 17th and 18 centuries was well-nigh universal—and understandably so. However, beginning in the early 19th century, there began to be societies organized pledged to total abstinence from spirits.

The State of Maine in 1846 passed the first Prohibition Law in American history. Hockett's "Political and Social Growth of the United States" says that by the end of 1856, thirteen states in the north and midwest had taken definite action for the abolition of the sale of alcoholic stimulants, but that in most of these states, the laws were later repealed or modified. He does note that Vermont and New Hampshire remained "dry" until 1904 and that Maine did until the 18th Amendment.

In 1869, a National Prohibition Party was organized and though it never got very many votes for its candidates, its cause prospered. By 1917, 32 of the 48 states were dry, according to Beard & Beard's "History of the United States." So when the 18th Amendment was submitted to the states, ratification was swift and the law went into effect one year later on Jan. 19, 1920.

There was at least one notorious speakeasy, The Breadencheese Club off Forest Avenue which took its unusual name for the nearby Bread and Cheese Swamp.

During the early 20th century, Massachusetts had a local license system allowing each city and town at annual election to vote yes or no to permit the licensed sale of intoxicating beverages for the next year. Cohasset voted No every year from 1914 through 1918 in which the vote was 220 Yes and 298 No.

So when the 18th Amendment went into effect, so far as at least half our population was concerned, not much was different.

But there was a big difference in the distribution of alcoholic products on what might be called a more wholesale basis. Rumrunners and bootleggers flourished locally. I have talked with several local residents who remember shots being fired and hijacking or attempted hijacking of loads of contraband being landed in the early 20s. There was at least one notorious speakeasy, The Breadencheese Club off Forest Avenue which took its unusual name for the nearby Bread and Cheese Swamp.

Burt Pratt in his Volume 2 of our town history, in his chapter on 1920s says that "The Cohasset shoreline was a natural landing place for illicit cargo being smuggled into the country, and that Cohasset folks, who made their living from the sea, were logical candidates for the job of rumrunning." He recites how the runners went out in small craft with large-cargo area and high-speed engines to load contraband and outrun the Coast Guard to land at the foot of Parker Avenue at Sandy Cove; or in the off-season, at various waterfront estates. The goods were quickly moved to temporary hiding places from whence they were transferred to a bootlegger. There are numerous tales of high-speed, shallow-draft rumrunners picking the right tides to speed over or between rocks and ledges that the pursuing Coast Guard dared not chance running aground on, or in one case, did.

The existence of the Breadencheese Club was a major focal point in the town political campaign in 1922 but the incumbent who was blamed for the selectmen's alleged failure to cope with the noise and alleged liquor law violations (Harry Mapes) was easily re-elected over Eugene N. Tower. The problem became moot when the place was destroyed by fire.

The excitement of the first years of prohibition in town, described by Pratt as "the muffled throb of high-powered marine engines; hidden contraband in cellars and barns; small arms fire in the dead of night; all of these and more" changed considerably in 1927. Chief of Police McArthur resigned and the selectmen appointed a 24-year-old corporal form the State Police Force to be chief—Hector J. Pelletier.

He believed in strict law enforcement (tempered by a commitment "to remedy and correct the minor transgressions of youngsters without recourse to the courts").

As Pratt says, "His officers became more familiar with every nook and cranny of the rocks and coves of Cohasset than were many of the bootleggers themselves. Every driveway and footpath along the shore was patrolled. In one raid, 375 cases of whiskey were captured on McElwain's Beach. He installed a system of having four officers on duty at night with roving patrols from 11 p.m. to 4 a.m.

In his first printed Annual Report in the Town Report, he writes, "We have had but little trouble in enforcing the laws against gaming and liquor violations owing to the fact that both have received strict attention, neither has become commercialized or secured a foothold here. We believe in the strict enforcement of these laws."

There is only one arrest shown in his report for the subsequent year for keeping and exposing liquor for sale. His published reports covering the years 1929 to 1932 reflect more problems with stolen cars, traffic, thefts and fires and there is no mention of the bootlegging problem. The 1931 "Arrests" compilation does show 50 drunks (two female) and 18 driving under the influence, but the chief's written report assures us the 95 percent of these offenders were non-residents of Cohasset.

In short, due in large measure to Chief Pelletier, the prohibition period, or at least the second half of it, was not as exciting and lawbreaking as it was in some other towns in Massachusetts and Rhode Island. And, of course, the country had had enough of the racketeering, big-city gang warfare and the organization of crime and the disrespect for the law engendered by prohibition and did away with it. The 18th Amendment was repealed by the 21st Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, passed in January 1933 and ratified by the states in December 1933.

In the Town of Cohasset, the Town Meeting in 1933 voted for delegates to the sate convention considering repeal. The vote was 145, 128, and 137 for the three delegates pledged to vote against repeal; and 666, 655 and 656 for the three delegates pledged to vote for repeal. The vote on whether to grant local licenses in the event of repeal was 445 Yes and 187 No. Quite a change from the five years, 1914-1918 when the Nos prevailed for all five years.

I think we can safely say, contrary to what I thought before I read through many of the Town Reports of the selectmen and the chief of police covering the prohibition period, that there were many other local issues of much more importance in our town during the roaring 20s than the passage of the 18th Amendment and its repeal by the 21st Amendment.

Lady laxers look back, ahead

Losses of Sheerin and Carter hurt, but core remains strong for '03

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

For the second year in a row, the Cohasset girls lacrosse team qualified for the state playoffs. And next year's squad should have the talent to make yet another return trip to the postseason, something that would establish Cohasset as one of the area's top programs.

The Lady Skippers will be led by a number of athletic seniors, all of whom made great contributions on the teams of the past two seasons. With the small number of seniors the last few seasons, the underclassmen have gained valuable experience at the varsity level.

Junior Maura McKenney was one of the leaders on the scoring attack with quick hands and a steady shot. Playing in all 17 of Cohasset's games, McKenney led the team in assists with 22 and in points with 65.

Junior Sera Genovese, who missed the opening four games of the year with an injury, took no time to work herself back into a starting role to be amongst the team leaders in goals. In her first three games, Genovese tallied eight goals, and had 17 through her first nine. Next year, playing a full season may well give her the chance to make a serious run at the SSL scoring crown.

Sophomore Nicole Turgiss played sparingly her freshman year, but had a breakout season as sophomore with 24 goals and 20 assists. Turgiss was instrumental in the comeback win over Mansfield this year, scoring four goals in a game that was pivotal in allowing the Lady Skippers to qualify for postseason play.

Juniors Rachel Smith and Sarah Brady had quiet success on the front line this year, as they both specialized in setting up their teammates, and averaged more than an assist per game each.

Despite all the talent and experience on offense next year, there will of course be one gaping hole left by the graduation of captain Kristin Sheerin. A remarkably fast and shifty playmaker, Sheerin was unquestionably the leader of the offense, playing the role of what first year coach Torin Sweeney described as both a point guard and a quarterback.

Sheerin became only the second Cohasset lacrosse player to top 100 goals for a career, going over the milestone as a junior. Despite defens-

Positive signs abound

With a new division, league additions and JV program, boys lax squad primed for '03

By Terry Kahn
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

A restructuring of Eastern Massachusetts boys' lacrosse into three divisions for 2003 means that a Cohasset boys' lacrosse team that returns seven starters and 15 lettermen should be, on paper, one of the favorites for the first Div. 3 state title next spring.

Further aiding the cause will be a league restructuring, with the Pilgrim Conference expanding from 10 to at least 12 teams, and each member playing the others only once. The new members are expected to be New Bedford, Nauset and possibly either one of the Plymouth high schools or North Quincy.

The biggest cause for optimism Cohasset will have in 2003 is a superb senior class. Five of its eight members have been picked as co-captains, and all are capable of all-star performances. Leading that

Tracking success

Graduating senior tracksters established lofty legacy

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Al LaFontain felt he had an exceptional group of freshmen when he took over the Cohasset High track program four years ago, but with no prior head coaching experience at the high school level, he wasn't completely sure of just how exceptional. Now he is.

"A lot of coaches who do it for many years will probably never see another group as good as that one," said LaFontain. "I'm just hoping I'm lucky enough to have a group that comes close to measuring up to these guys."

Indeed, future Cohasset High tracksters now have quite a legacy to live up to. Pete Maitland, Tim Baird, Steve Laney, Jason Brown, Liam Martin and Dan Kinchla formed the core of a team that compiled a 27-2 record over the last four years, including these last two consecutive perfect seasons in South Shore League competition. These were, incidentally, the first two track titles Cohasset High had won after a 28-year dry spell,.

Clearly, this is a feat that would be remarkable for any school team, but that literally goes double for a school the size of C.H.S., as several of the rival SSL school's are literally twice its size.

What is more, not only is Cohasset by far the smallest school in the SSL, with a student body of just over 300, but it offers more spring athletic programs than all of the league's teams except Norwell. To be more specific, Mashpee, Harwich, Norton, Carver and Hull do not have lacrosse programs. We all know what a big draw lacrosse is in Cohasset, right?

"Lightning struck a couple of times for us with the kids we've had run track," noted Cohasset High Athletic Director Ron Ford. "We've just had unbelievable luck with the talent we've had, but that includes the coach too. Al LaFontain has done an amazing job with the kids he's had."

This year's boys squad of 22 was the biggest ever for LaFontain, but it was still far smaller in number than most of their opponents. In years past, the rosters of Carver and Norton were often triple the size of Cohasset's. However, what this team has wanted for in quantity it has obviously more than made up for in quality.

Maitland, Baird and Laney began competing with the varsity squad as eighth graders when LaFontain was an assistant coach. He knew he had

Clark's Run makes splash

Cohasset High's Baird and Buckley win first-ever race under stormy skies, sloppy conditions

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

A total of 87 hearty souls braved the worst Mother Nature had to dish out Saturday morning in order to remember the life of one of Cohasset's most beloved citizens, Clark Chatterton, and raise money in his name for a worthy cause.

The inaugural "Clark's Fund Run" took place in Cohasset Saturday morning despite torrential downpours and a soggy course, with all proceeds going to the Clark Chatterton Memorial Fund, which benefits youth sports activities in town.

The 3.5-mile race, which began and ended at the South Shore Music Circus on Sohier Street, was organized by friends of the late Chatterton, the former Cohasset High athletic director who succumbed in his battle to cancer in the summer of 2000.

Fittingly, the race was won by Cohasset High 2002 graduate, Tim Baird, a top track athlete at the school for several years who actually grew up next door to the Chattertons and held Clark in extremely high regard. Tim covered the slick and sloppy route in 20:06, a blistering mile pace of 5:45, made all the more impressive considering the conditions.

"Clark was a great guy," said Tim, who had Chatterton as a phys ed teacher as well as an athletic director. "I really wanted to win this race, and it feels real special that I was able to."

The 3.5-mile course actually took Tim and the rest of the field right past his own home and the Chattertons' home on Red Gate Lane, and Tim admitted that he felt a surge of emotion as he ran through his neighborhood.

"Those were probably the worst conditions I've ever run in, but I was thinking a lot about Clark during the run," confided Tim, who still has a "Red Gate Clan" T-shirt Clark printed up for him as a child.

"The rain was bad, but fortunately it wasn't too cold," added Tim, who will defer admission to the University of Richmond a year in order to spend a year volunteering with Americore in Charleston, South Carolina.

Tim finished just seven seconds ahead of Roslindale's Kevin Coyle (20:13) and 20 seconds better than top local runner, Joe Kelly (20:26), of Pembroke. Cohasset's Mike Kearney finished fourth (21:54) and Scituate's Ted Coyle (22:02) rounded out the top five overall.

Cohasset High junior-to-be Jenn Buckley, another star high school trackster, was the first female runner to break the tape, finishing 10th overall in 24:34. She finished comfortably ahead of Mary Kate Colbert (26:27), of Hyde Park, and fellow CHS lady trackster Yasmine Afshar (28:38).

"We really have to thank everyone who turned out for this, and for the spirit they all showed," said Fund Committee Member Ron Ford, who succeeded Chatterton as athletic director. "I thought the spirit was great and I'm hoping this kicked off a nice tradition in Cohasset that will help keep Clark's memory alive."

Among the 87 runners and many volunteers were several current and former Cohasset High students who knew Chatter ton well. Clark's widow and family were also on

Cohasset Youth Soccer hosts 50 U-10 teams in youth jamboree

Milliken field was the hub of soccer activity Saturday June 1,2002. Fifty U10 soccer teams played in a youth Jamboree. Cohasset hosted Marshfield and Scituate in the six hour Soccer Jamboree. For many of the players this was the first time they opposed an out of town team. The adrenaline ran high and the kids played their hearts out under a beautiful, yet windy, blue sky. Scituate sent 12 boys teams to challenge Cohassets 8 boy's teams. The games, 30 minutes in duration, were played on 8 fields lined specifically for 6 on 6 play. After 2 hours of fierce competition, the boys, all walked away tired, happy and committed to meeting again next year. The girl's competition began next. Thirty teams came to play, 12 from Scituate, 10 from Marshfield, and 8 Cohasset. Each team played a minimum of 3 highly competitive skillful games. By 2pm the sun, heat and hours of playing were starting to show but the girls continued until the final whistle blew.

The players, referees and fans had a great time.

For the in town soccer program Saturday was also the last day of the season. All players received trophies for a great effort and smiled willingly for the camera. The Cohasset youth soccer program has over 700 players. The in town program begins with the Kinder Kickers and continues through U10 or 4th grade. Travel teams start in the U12 program and continue in the U14 and U16 leagues. Cohasset has become a force to reckon with over the years and a program envied by other communities. Once again Cohasset's U12 girls and U12 boys team as well as the U14 girls and U14 boys team made it to the Coastal League Playoffs. Congratulations to all the players involved in a great season!

U-12 girls capture Coastal League soccer crown

Booters to play in state championships in Amherst this weekend

When the rains finally ceased and the winds swept the last clouds from the sky, the Cohasset Girl's Under 12 Soccer team prevailed in their quest to become the Coastal Youth Soccer League Division 2 Champions. This past weekend tested both the skills of the players and the resolve of their parents as Mother Nature did all she could to disrupt the league playoffs.

Oblivious to incessant downpours, Cohasset took the field at 8:30 Saturday morning at Duxbury's Coppin Field to face undefeated Scituate. With an impressive record of 9 wins, 0 losses, and 3 ties, Scituate was clearly the toughest test our girls had faced to date. With first possession, Scituate immediately went on the attack, demonstrating brilliant passing skills and outstanding speed, quickly asserting itself as a dominant offensive threat. Cohasset, calm and confident, fought off the initial onslaught and worked systematically to turn the tide. As they had done so many times before, Cohasset Full Backs Anna Hagerty, and Samantha Fortin shut the gates down tight, turning away persistent Scituate attackers. At sweeper and stopper positions, Ellie Casey and Sammi Lehr roamed sideline to sideline supporting Sammie Fortin and Anna Hagerty in their classic "contain" defense. Any shot fortunate enough to penetrate this defense was quickly swallowed up by goalie Johanna Brophy.

Utilizing the entire field, Cohasset midfielders, Gina Giuggio, Meg Anderson, and Caitlin Mahoney were first to every ball, maneuvering play to the sidelines and up the field. Although outsized, Rachel McMorris, Kristin Monaco and Alicia Asnault proved themselves to be the explosive offensive weapons determined to deliver the ball to the Attack. Center Midfielders Sarah Coggins, McKenna Teague and Gabriella Flibotte controlled the middle of the field, perfectly placing passes to the attacking forwards. Relentlessly, Maggie McGoldrick and Torey Hart peppered the opposing goalkeeper from all angles, sapping the strength form the opposing defense. This offensive pressure opened the door for Sammie Fortin to bury a top right corner goal, her second goal of the day, putting Cohasset on top to stay. Cohasset's 2 to 1 victory over Scituate set the stage for the Championship game against undefeated Plymouth on Sunday.

Sunday dawned with a more optimistic forecast and promise for fast play conditions. Plymouth presented a formidable challenge fielding a larger team with prolific scoring skill. Straight away, Cohasset launched the attack. Smaller in stature, Cohasset used their speed and passing skills to advance upon the Plymouth goal. Solid mid field play and defense produced a balanced attack that soon saw a pinpoint pass from Sarah Coggins to Maggie McGoldrick drawing first blood with a beautiful goal early in the first half. Plymouth immediately responded with a counterattack tying the game three minutes later. Undaunted, Cohasset tightened up and returned to their disciplined style. Strong midfield play from Sally Meehan and Caitlin Mahoney kept the field wide and accessible. With the middle of the field wide open, stopper Sammi Lehr delivered a perfect pass to left attacker Torey Hart who took the ball directly to goal, beating the Plymouth goalie, giving Cohasset a 2-1 advantage. Never giving in, Plymouth tied the game once again to head into the half knotted at 2 apiece.

The season finale came down to a 30 minute half. Win, and Cohasset would be League Champions with an invitation to participate in the Massachusetts Tournament of Champions, lose, and the successful season would end with a terrific team effort. Either way these girls had proven to their coaches, their parents and themselves that they embraced and understood the benefit of hard work and dedication to their teammates. This soccer field played host to two teams full of good athletes, good sports, and great kids.

Tired but tenacious, Cohasset pressed the offense, dominating the play. The Plymouth team fought admirably against the constant assault, turning away attack after attack. With 5 minutes remaining in the game, the pressure proved too much. A cross from Torey Hart to Maggie McGoldrick presented an open net that Maggie promptly filled for the game winning goal and the Coastal League championship.

The Cohasset Girls U12 team will represent the Coastal Youth Soccer League in Amherst MA this weekend. Good Luck Ladies, we're very proud of you.

Senior tracksters established legacy something special in the three of them, but Baird really caught his eye when he ran the mile in under five minutes.

"That was just unheard of for someone that young," recalled the coach. "But he acted like it was nothing big. I knew I was looking at a lot of first places in the mile events for several years to come."

And that was just the proverbial tip of the iceberg.

Baird often competed and placed in multiple events. The mile was his specialty, but he also volunteered to go longer (2-mile) and shorter (800-meters) in order to earn much-needed points for his undermanned team. In some meets, he even ran in all three events – something that is probably even more unheard of than eighth graders running five minute miles.

"We had great leadership from all of my senior captains: Tim, Pete (Maitland), Jason (Brown) and Steve (Laney)," noted LaFontain. "They set an example for work ethic, and the others followed."

More to the point, all of these young men often competed, like Baird, in the maximum number of allotted events per meet, this while most rival tracksters were able to hone and specialize their skills in one of two events.

Liam Martin, who missed all of the fall sports season (football) and most of the winter season (basketball) with a broken leg, bounced back in the spring and returned to form as one of the area's top high jumper. He also took a key second place in a late season 300-meter hurdles race, eschewing the risk of well known re-injury in order to help the team.

Kinchla, like Baird, would often run in both the mile and 2-mile, and frequently notched points. These two going 1-2 in both events in the SSL title-clinching Mashpee win last month is something Coach LaFontain will probably be talking about for many years to come.

This is not to suggest this was a six- or seven-man team. Cohasset High has produced several top male tracksters in recent years. In fact, there were several key contributors lost to the caps and gowns last year, among them two-time Class D state 200-meter champion Brian Krupczak.

But Cohasset track keeps finding ways to buck the odds and come up with high-end replacements. This year, seniors Jay Bertovich and Jari Martin came out for track for the first time ever and contributed vital depth in events such as the hurdles and throwing sports (javelin, discus).

LaFontain joked about having to constantly replenish his supply of hurdles in shop class because of a penchant by Martin, who looks more like a defensive lineman (which in fact he was for the SSL champion Skippers this fall) at 6-foot-1, 200 pounds than a hurdler, to run through them rather than over them.

"But Jari helped a lot, and so did Jay," said the coach. "We would have been in big trouble without them."

Underclassmen such as Jared Krupczak (Brian's brother) and Ian Kidder showed improvement LaFontain called "remarkable," providing consistent points in areas the coach had concerns with going in to the season.

"Brian (Krupczak) came down to a practice late in the season and was just shocked by what he saw from his brother," reported LaFontain. "He said 'Wow, where did that come from.'

"Jared really looks like he wants to fill his brother's shoes and the way he's going, it wouldn't be shocking to see that happen."

Junior Braun Goodson (throwing) and Eric Belz (sprints) also came on strong over the course of the season to provide essential dual meet placings.

LaFontain had all kinds of stories he was anxious to share. Unfortunately, we have space limitations.

"It's amazing how we've been able to replace certain kids you think are irreplaceable," he said in summation. "I guess no one is irreplaceable."

Of course, he concedes that theory may be placed to a pretty extreme test next spring, with Baird, Maitland, Laney, Brown, Kinchla, Bertovich and the Martins all headed off to college.

"Yeah, this will be a pretty good challenge," noted the coach. "I just hope the example they set carries over. Jared (Krupczak), Ian (Kidder) and Eric (Belz) are just a few of the guys who are capable of taking a big step up next year. Hopefully, there'll be a few more pleasant surprises."

Girls wrap up

Don't look now, but the Cohasset girls appear as if they may be ready for a little of this action.

The team's top four athletes are all underclassmen. The Cohasset lady tracksters finished the season with four straight wins to wrap up their first +.500 season in several years, and the way was led by sophomores Jen Buckley and Gillian Weber, and freshmen Mary Silvia and Nicole Whitney.

These four girls competed well in individual events as well as together in the 4x800 relay.

"I think these girls all have a real good shot at getting to all-states next year, and who knows after that," noted LaFontain. "They all work hard now. If that continues, we could be talking about the girls the same way we are about the boys."

The coach added: "Honestly, I think that's one of the things that drives them. They've seen all of the attention the boys have gotten, and I think they want their day in the sun too."

pack are second-year captain Nick Spirito, a defenseman who's started since his freshman year, and attackman Curt Kahn, the Skippers' 2002 leading scorer with 51 goals and 83 points. Spirito, a Bay State Games gold medalist in 2001 and a second-team all-conference selection this year, is a hard-nosed one-on-one defender with excellent stick skills who will anchor an experienced close defense unit. Kahn, who will have 143 career points going into his senior season, also won a BSG gold medal in 2001, was an all-conference selection, and emerged this spring as one of the league's most accurate shooters.

The other three captains – Matt Davis, Robert Hickey and Tom Anderson – all saw most of their playing time at midfield, although Anderson took over a defense slot for several games late in the year and Davis filled in successfully at attack on several occasions. Davis, one of the team's best dodgers, finished with 24 goals and 52 points, his second consecutive 20-goal season. An all-conference selection in 2001, he could take over a starting attack job in 2003, or be a member of one of the state's top midfield units. Anderson, perhaps the best athlete in the class, demonstrated that he could be a stand-out with either a long or short stick. He finished with 13 goals, following a 16-goal season in 2001, and will likely see most of his time at midfield in 2003. Hickey, the team's face-off specialist, an all-conference selection and possessor of one of the Skippers' hardest shots, should be one of the state's best at taking draws.

The remaining seniors – midfielders John Durkin and Evan Pestone, and defenseman Ben Lynner – all project to have outstanding 2003 seasons. Like Hickey, Durkin has a powerful shot and could easily emerge as a 15-20 goal scorer in 2003. Lynner, in his first year of high school play, quickly became a starter. A three-sport athlete, his size gives Cohasset a daunting physical presence around the crease. Pestone, perhaps the fastest player on the team, polished his skills over the course of this season and could emerge as a difference-maker in 2003.

"Our seniors next year will be our greatest asset," said Coach Kevin Orcutt. "With a schedule that allows us more choice in who we play, and the new D3 tournament, this will be an exciting season for Cohasset lacrosse."

Cohasset's junior class will feature several starters, and a lot of potential as well. Defenseman Steve Davis, the most intimidating defender on the squad, became a starter late in the season and had a solid performance, particularly against Norwell in the tourney. He'll join Lynner and Spirito around the crease. Conor Buick, a two-year letterman, will also figure into the defensive rotation. Dan Roth, another good-sized defender with excellent stick skills, is expected to see plenty of playing time.

Mark Davis, Mike Hajjar and Dwayne Morris should move onto the first two midfields, all having excellent stick skills. Morris' speed will present a tough challenge for defenders, while both Davis and Hajjar are good shooters. JT Oronte, another middie with blazing speed, will also see action.

Longstick midfielder Mike Devine, a starter for most of 2002 and an attackman as a freshman, could play at either a long- or short-stick position – defense, midfield or attack. Wherever he's put, he's expected to start. Mike Rasmussen, who saw action at attack and midfield, will be given the opportunity to prove himself as a starting attackman. With his size and strength, he could quickly become a 20-goal scorer.

Goalie Nick Murphy, who backed up Kyle Weber for two years, will be the most closely-watched member of this class. Seeing action in 10 games this season, Murphy had 22 saves while allowing 18 goals. A year ago, he got into nine games and started one, amassing 37 saves while giving up 14 goals.

"Nick will have some pressure on him, and we've asked him to do a lot of work in the off-season," said Coach Orcutt. "He needs to find games to play in this summer – as do all our juniors – and he needs to work next fall and winter. But we believe in him, and will give him the chance to do the job."

Several sophomores are also expected to make significant contributions. At the top of the list are attackman Jake Previte and defenseman Casey Coleman. Previte, who had nine goals this season, could work his way into the starting attack. Coleman has great potential as a longstick midfielder, particularly if Devine shifts his position. Other sophs who will make a contribution are attackman Jon Grimm, midfielders Mark Donovan and Colin Regan, defenseman Matt Baroudi and goalie Chris Simms.

"Another piece of good news for 2003 is that we're planning to have a junior varsity with a full-time coach," said coach Orcutt. "That will give all our sophomores and freshman plenty of game play, which you really need to get better. With a JV schedule of eight-to-ten games, you're really going to see our young guys come along quickly."

New division, new schedule, JV team, returning stars…what's not to like about the 2003 prospects for Skippers' lacrosse?

Alumni Game Draws large crowd

Even Years team edges Odds, 4-3

A turnout of 20-plus alums staged a spirited contest in the second annual Cohasset Alumni Game, held to benefit the Bourke Corcoran Scholarship Fund.

The two teams, coached informally by Cohasset Lacrosse founders Ken Ekberg and Terry Kahn, were evenly matched despite being arbitrarily split into odd and even graduation years.

The Evens, featuring a powerful attack line of Providence College scoring record holder Ken Leahy, Cohasset season scoring record holder Jamie Buick, and just-graduated Eric Libby, edged the Odds, who were led on defense by former Lafayette College captain Matt Belson and ex-Harvard goalie Ely Kahn. The final score was 4-3.

Participants included David Leahy (1995), Ken Leahy, Kevin Smith, Ed Hamilton (1996), Ely Kahn, Matt Belson, Matt O'Connor, Bob Stansell (1997), Jamie Buick, Adam Donovan, Pat Leahy, Ted Reardon (1998), Ted Goff, Jay Whoriskey, (1999), Kevin DeVito, Brad Powell (2000), Geoff McWilliams, Ronan Buick, Lane Forrer (2001), and Eric Libby, Kyle Weber, Sean Chase, Pete Whoriskey and Chris Caron (2002). Head coach Kevin Orcutt also saw some playing time, scoring the final goal of the game on a shot that spectators agreed was "magical."

Referee for the game was Chuck Jaffe.

"Chuck's carrying a few extra pounds these days," remarked coach Kahn, "so he seemed a bit fatigued at the end. But, like the trooper he is, he gutted it out."

Proceeds from the game go to the Bourke Corcoran Scholarship, named after a former Cohasset lacrosse stand-out who passed away just after his senior season. His parents, Bourke and Merlyn, attended the game, and joined players and parents at a post-game picnic hosted by the Lacrosse Boosters and David and Barbara Leahy.

Lady laxers look back, ahead

es clamping down on her with double and triple teams much of the time in the offensive end, Sheerin managed over 40 goals for the fourth consecutive year.

On defense, the story is quite the same as that of the offense: a host of experienced players will come back, but the graduation of a key senior leaves room for a few more to step up.

Juniors Katherine Coyne and Julie Lordan helped lead a solid defense for Cohasset, and also pitched in with a combined six goals and eight assists. Along with sophomores Ashley Faber and Megan Marr, who both did fine jobs as substitutes on defense, Coyne and Lordan should again be able to lead a fast-improving transition game.

Nevertheless, the loss of senior captain Carlie Carter will hurt. Carter missed her senior year of soccer and gymnastics, recovering from knee surgery. Though she was not at 100 percent in terms of speed or ability this spring on the lacrosse field, Carter maintained her position as a fearsome attacking defender.

Behind the defense will be Gia Petrakis, the veteran goalie who will be the starter for all of her four years. Petrakis went over 500 career saves this year, a benchmark which has been equated with scoring 1,000 points in basketball. Recording an outstanding save percentage of .630, Petrakis has improved her game every year.

Cause of crash under investigation

On Friday, June 14 at about 3:15pm, officers from the Cohasset Police Department were called the scene of a serious motor vehicle accident in the parking lot of Tedeschi Plaza, 772 Chief Justice Cushing Highway (Route 3A). The report of the accident was called in via police radio by an on-duty Cohasset Police Detective Garrett Hunt. Hunt said an elderly male driver at a very high rate of speed had just crashed head-on into a five-foot tall concrete retaining wall in the parking lot.

This shopping plaza is home to Fleet Bank, Victoria's Pizza, Curtis Liquors, Nobles Camera Shop, and other stores. Hunt was conducting a follow-up on a breaking and entering investigation when he witnessed the crash.

Hunt rushed towards the wreckage and administered first aid to the driver. As other police officers arrived, the victim's condition deteriorated, to the point where the victim lost his pulse and stopped breathing. Sgt. William Quigley and Hunt started emergency CPR at the scene. Officers continued CPR until members of the Cohasset Fire Department arrived. Care of the victim was taken over by Cohasset Fire and he was transported to South Shore Hospital where he was pronounced dead at 4:25pm.

An elderly Cohasset man died from injuries sustained when his Ford Explorer hit a retaining wall in Tedeschi Plaza last week.

The victim was identified as Andrew Foster, 76, of 84 Old Pasture Road. The cause of death was multiple traumatic injuries.

The 1993 Ford Explorer Foster was driving was totaled in the collision. The cause of the accident remains under investigation by Quigley and Officer Christy Tarantino. Witnesses, including Hunt, estimate the Ford Explorer's speed at greater than 50mph before impact with the concrete wall. The interior of the Explorer also sustained heavy damage. No seatbelt was worn and the vehicle was not equipped with an airbag.

Questions regarding this accident can be directed to Sgt. John Conte (781) 383-1055 or Sgt. Quigley (781) 387-7244.

Benefit dinner for discovery museum

Celebrity Chef Anthony Ambrose is creating a special dinner menu to benefit Our World, the new children's discovery museum set to open in Cohasset in the fall of 2003.

The dinner will be held July 1, at 6:30 p.m. at Atlantica Restaurant, 44 Border St.. Tickets are $125 each with a portion of the proceeds going to the non-profit Our World Inc. Reservations are required at 781-383-0300.

Ambrose, a Cohasset resident, is chef-owner of Ambrosia on Huntington in Boston. He and his wife, Dorene, are parents of two small children and vitally interested in the museum project.

Leah Taylor Roy and Mary Larson are in the midst of a $1 million fundraising campaign to construct the museum and an associated global-themed playground in a two story wing of the former Joseph Osgood School. The two Cohasset residents view the project as a way to bring cultural diversity to the area.

The town's new library will occupy the rest of the former school building, which is located at the corner of Ripley Road and Sohier Street. Roy and Larson believe the museum will be the perfect tie-in for the library.

Rusty Skippers on the common

Cohasset's own Rusty Skippers Band will be playing on Cohasset Common on Tuesday June 25. The Band will feature some of its marching music around the duck pond at 7:15 and then play on the north side of First Parish from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m.. In the event of rain, the band will play inside Bates Hall at the Second Congregational Church.

A special feature for this concert: the name of a child age 13 and under will be drawn for the opportunity to conduct the band in the Liberty Bell March. So come early, bring the lawn chair and bug repellent. Do not miss this concert, the last of the band's Spring 2002 tour!

Festival brightens up a wet weekend said Monica McKenney, development and PR director for the event. "This weekend they could be found all over the common — greeting newcomers, requesting donations, and helping the venders. We couldn't run this event successfully without them."

For much of the weekend, the weather was far less than ideal for an outside event, but the faithful art lovers from around the area still showed up.

"Overall the weather didn't hold back the crowds. Friday and Saturday's weather was terrible, but Sunday's was terrific," McKenney said. "It seems like every year we're dealing with at least one day of rain or downpour- unfortunately it's part of being an outside event this time of year."

On Friday and Saturday, the stark contrast to the outside world was immediately apparent to all those entering the main tent. While outside the cold wind whipped across the common and the steady rain chilled visitors to the bone, inside the tent people seemed almost oblivious to what was happening outside.

It was jammed with art admirers of all ages smiling and enjoying the displays of incredible artistic talent while The O'Reillys and many other bands filled the tent with music.

Sunday proved to be the best weather day and therefore the day with the largest turnout. The live music was moved back outside and people crowed onto the common to take part in the event.

"Sunday we were as busy as we've ever been," McKenny said. "There were points where I'd look down on the common and almost not be able to see the grass for all the people."

The main tent housed local art of numerous varieties. From hooked rugs to watercolors and photographs, the wide range of artistic medias was apparent in the displays.

A sense of recently renewed patriotism and echoes of September 11 rang out in much of the artwork. Paintings such as "Those Bastards!" by Dan McCole commemorated the event.

In McCole's work, two firefighters kneel in the foreground mourning a fallen comrade, while others behind them raise the American Flag in front of the fallen Twin Towers.

The displayed art was divided into two main categories — public art and art created by members of the South Shore Art Center. The two groups were then judged separately by a panel who collectively reviewed the pieces.

Every member of the Art Center was entitled to display one piece of their work at the festival, but not every piece submitted by the public was admitted.

"We received about 400 pieces of art from the community," said Kennedy. "In the end 140 were displayed in this year's festival."

Prizes for the public art display included categories such as oil/acrylic, watercolor, black and white photography, color photography, drawing/pastel, mixed media, and printmaking.

The Best in Show award went to the astoundingly detailed watercolor, "Sconset Porch," created by Marla Greenfield of Wayland.

While the official awards were on display, everyone had their own opinion on their favorite piece of art.

Will Castro views all the festival goings-on from the crest of the hill by the duck pond.

"Can we get this one? It's only $3,995," Abbie Newkirk, 12, said to her father in regards to her personal favorite, "North Scituate Emporium" — an oil painting by Robert Beauloeu.

"Only $3,995?" replied her father, Scott Newkirk.

After seeing the artwork in the main tent, visitors were able to walk around the common and explore the 85 smaller vender tents where they could purchase everything from hand-blown hummingbird feeders to jewelry and amateur art.

"One of the most amazing things about the festival this year was the quality and commitment of the vendors," Kennedy said. "We spent a lot of extra time to ensure the highest vender quality and it really paid off."

Among the art venders' tents, there were also many places set up that offered everything from light snack, like kettle corn and Italian ice, to places specializing in more complete meals, such as pizza and even one place selling Greek food.

Across the street from the common, many people seeking sanctuary from the cold and a delicious snack went inside of the Second Congregational Church to attend the Strawberry Festival annually hosted there. The Strawberry Festival's main focus is their freshly prepared strawberry shortcake.

Four dollars got customers a heaping bowlful of the delicious desert. By the time many had finished the shortcake, it had single-handedly insured their return to next year's festival.

Despite Mother Nature's attempt to stifle the success of this year's festival, it once again proved to be an enormous success.

Anne Murray comes to Norwell's Company Theatre June 23.

On the road again

A new tour and a new album for Anne Murray

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

When the topic of her new album comes up during a telephone interview to promote her Sunday appearance at the South Shore Music Circus, Anne Murray wastes no time in wrapping her familiar alto around a few bars of "Make the World Go Away."

By turning to song, Murray quickly charms her audience of one in the same way she has captivated concert-goers for more than three decades. The song snippet also makes it easy to understand why the four-time Grammy Award winner continues to be in-demand as both a recording artist and live performer.

Murray's thirty-third album, "Country Croonin'" (EMI Canada, Sparrow Records in the US), won't be released until Nov. 5, but after spending the past two months in a Toronto recording studio, the Canadian songbird is eager to discuss the project.

"The new album is a real labor of love. It may even be my best work, because of the freedom I have now. I'm no longer governed by radio," explains Murray whose first album "What About Me" was released in 1968. "I don't have to come up with hit records like I did earlier in my career. The pressure is gone. Now, I just have to come up with the best album I can."

On "Country Croonin,'" Murray offers new versions of familiar songs like "Me and Bobby McGee," "Bye Bye Love," and "Help Me Make It Through The Night" and other crossover music made famous by everyone from Eddy Arnold and Jim Reeves to Elvis Presley.

"These songs are proven. We already know they are great," says Murray. "What's nice is that I have this opportunity to offer my own interpretations of them."

As she did with her platinum-selling 1998 release, "What A Wonderful World," Murray will rely on television to spread the word about the new album.

"Television commercials let people know you're still around," the veteran entertainer points out. "They not only sell albums, but they also give you a high profile. They let people know you're still out there and working."

Thanks to a heavy touring schedule this summer, Murray — who turns 57 June 20 — will have no trouble making it clear that she is definitely still working.

"You know, before you go out on the road, you say "Oh, God. But once I get out there then I just have a ball. My group has been with me for years, too. They're really like my family. We really love what we do," says Murray.

Anne Murray

What they do this summer, however, won't include music from "Country Croonin'"

"I'll wait to perform that material until after the album comes out. I like people to be able to buy an album of mine, before I do music from it in my concerts."

With material from 32 previous albums, and hits like "Snowbird," "You Needed Me," and" Could I Have This Dance," to call upon, Murray won't have any trouble compiling a song list. And before too long, she'll probably be touring again in support of the new album.

"I took the year 2000 off and at that time I was thinking that might be the end of it, but after the success of the last album and then with the new one still ahead, I think 'Well, OK, I'll go on the road again.'"

(Anne Murray will appear at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset on Sunday, June 23, at 8 p.m For tickets and information, call 781/383-1400.)

A real alternative: The Matt Chase Band

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

On one track, "Let Yourself Go," from the newly released inde pendent CD by his Scituate-based, self-named band, Matt Chase sings, "Here I am now/Offering a way out/So come on take my hand/Let me show you how."

It's not typical rock songwriting bombast, as the song's lyrics in general are more of a personal, reflective nature than the average over-hyped, heavy-message rock anthem. But the Matt Chase Group is not a typical band in the current music scene, and the lines do suggest something fresh, original and different that the band is offering to Boston area club-goers. It's something for those looking for a way out of the hipper-than-thou musical trends of alterna-pop, punk/metal, rap/hip-hop and dance music or any combinations within now saturating both the clubs and the airwaves.

What the Matt Chase Group is offering seems to be a genuine alternative these days, a fusion of rock, funk, Latin and jazz that draws from past practitioners such as Steely Dan and Earth Wind & Fire and present genre-blenders like Sting, the Dave Matthews Band and Phish to craft a sound the band believes might point a direction to the future.

The Scituate-based Matt Chase Group will host a CD release party for the band's new album "Middle of A Mystery," Friday night at Copperfield's in Boston.

The official release party for the Chase Group's debut disc, titled Middle of a Mystery, takes place this Friday evening, June 22 at Copperfield's — a club located in Boston's Fenway where the band also plays a regular monthly gig.

What the Matt Chase Group is offering seems to be a genuine alternative these days, a fusion of rock, funk, Latin and jazz that draws from past practitioners such as Steely Dan and Earth Wind & Fire and present genre-blenders like Sting, the Dave Matthews Band and Phish.

"The band members met and came together about two years ago, when we were all still at Berklee College of Music in Boston and playing in different ensembles together," said Chase. "From the beginning, we've all been interested in playing a style of music that's different from most of what we've been hearing on the radio and in clubs in the last few years. We all liked certain jazz-influenced rock and R&B from the 1970s, such as Steely Dan and Earth Wind & Fire, and newer bands that like to blend the jazz and world music influences like the Dave Matthews Band and Phish. Plus I had songwriting material built up that I was looking for an outlet for in this type of music."

The experience of meeting at Berklee, which draws students from around the globe, afforded Chase, who grew up in the Minot area of Scituate, the opportunity to make his band a multi-ethnic, multi-cultural union. The Chase Group's lead guitarist, Ryan Ackerman, is a Quincy native with similar musical tastes whom Chase met at the college. In the ensemble groups the two eventually met and began rehearsing with bassist Fernando Mainer and pianist Pancho Burgos, both from Spain, and drummer Mauricio Zottarelli, from Brazil.

The Latin players bring a combined wealth of experience and diversity to the band. Mainer had previously recorded seven CDs and been in Spain's Top 30 with one of the country's successful pop bands, Taco, while Burgos has toured extensively throughout Spain and Zotarelli is already known and respected as a session player and one of the top players at Berklee.

"We're looking to break through with the college-age audience, the crowd that pretty much made big names of the Dave Matthews Band and Phish," Chase said. "The college crowd generally tends to be more open to new and different things. Our plan as a band is to play the sort of clubs that attracts this clientele and build our audience with the reputation from our live shows. It also helps now that we've got the product of this new CD to promote.

The Middle of a Mystery CD is chock full of the kinds of 70s-style, jazz-meets-rock beats, rhythms and harmonics that has the band getting the label "retro" thrown at them often. But the crafty musicianship of songs like the track, "Falling Stars" and even a taste for shuffling, barroom blues on "That's All" combine well with Chase's

Disney and 'Lilo' make odd couple

A new animated feature shakes things up at studio

By Ed Symkus
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

It's a pleasant surprise when a film studio known for one type of product takes a big risk by going in a different direction — and it pays off. That's the case with Disney's newest animated feature, "Lilo & Stitch." On the surface, it may appear to be a typical Disney film — painstakingly drawn sequences, cute characters doing funny things, and some emotional baggage to complicate the story. But this Disney item is anything but typical.

First of all, Stitch is a creature from another world, a dangerous genetic experiment gone awry that has managed to escape and find refuge on Earth. And second, the humans that Stitch eventually moves in with — orphaned Nani (voice of Tia Carrere) and her little sister Lilo (voice of Daveigh Chase) — are wrapped up in real, very recognizable personal issues.

Chris Sanders (left) and Clark Spencer have a laugh over the creation of their little monster Stitch.

Little Lilo educates Stitch about her favorite music man.

Chris Sanders, one of the co-directors (along with Dean Deblois), who made the film over the past four years, knew from the start that he and his team were setting up a challenge for themselves.

"The word 'Disney' on a film makes a promise to be a broad audience film," he says. "But we made a bigger promise on this one — that we would make a film that was everything Disney, and was really nothing Disney of recent years. We made it one of our choices to break conventions on this film. We threw out the ideas of heroes and villains, we threw out the ideas of good and bad. And by throwing those out and making a very bold story, I feel like we got back to Disney of old. I was always impressed with 'Bambi,' which had such a beautiful, friendly look, but is really a very powerful, gutsy film. We wanted to do the same thing."

One of the ways that was accomplished

Strawberries plain and simple

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

In the new cookbook by Alice Waters, "Chez Panisse Fruit", she has a wonderful recipe for strawberries and orange segments served with a light syrup infused with the flavor of orange zest. Since strawberry season is in high gear, I turned to this recipe for its elegance and simplicity, being far easier to make than a cobbler, shortcake, or pie. As usual, I wondered if I could make it either better or simpler.

I quickly gave up on the "better" half of the equation – it's a simple and refreshing dessert as long as the fruit is good. However, Alice calls for simmering the sugar syrup for 30 minutes plus segmenting oranges, another step, is not the easiest thing for most home cooks. So I decided to stick to strawberries and simplify the syrup.

The recipe calls for 1/2 cup of sugar to one cup of water and a long simmering time to extract the flavor of the orange peel. I tested shorter cooking times, from five to 30 minutes, and found that the flavor was no less intense with a quick simmer. The other benefit of the longer cooking time was a thicker syrup but by reducing the amounts and changing the proportions (to 1/4 cup sugar and 1/3 cup water) the syrup was plenty thick in record time. I also tested lemon instead of orange zest but was unimpressed with the flavor. Other flavors such as basil, thyme, lemongrass, and mint were less well suited than orange. However, I did like a bit of liqueur and Cointreau came up a winner. It cut down on the sweetness and added another dimension to the syrup while maintaining a light, clean finish.

As for the berries, I tested adding them to a hot syrup but they lost their fresh flavor and texture. As a result, I allowed the syrup to cool before adding the berries. (Alice also tosses the berries with granulated sugar but I found this step unnecessary.) I also discovered that this dish should be made at the last minute for best results. (This way, the fresh berries will glisten with a thin coat of clear, sweet, orange syrup.) If left to sit in the refrigerator, the strawberries will macerate and their juice will combine with the syrup resulting in something less elegant.

These berries are great with panna cotta, vanilla ice cream, zabaglione, whipped cream, shortcake, pancakes or waffles. I also loved them combined with blueberries. For a crowd the amounts can be doubled.

STRAWBERRIES WITH ORANGE-INFUSED SYRUP

Use a very light hand in zesting the orange. Any trace of the white pith and the syrup will have bitter undertones. A rasp or fine grater works best. Don't make this recipe unless the strawberries are first-rate. If you like, combine the strawberries with segmented oranges.

1/4 cup sugar
1/3 cup water
Finely grated zest of one orange
1 tablespoon Cointreau or orange liqueur of your choice
1 quart strawberries, rinsed and dried

Combine the sugar, water and zest in a small saucepan. Stir to combine and bring to a simmer over medium heat. Reduce heat to maintain simmer and cook for five minutes or until syrupy. Off heat add the Cointreau. Transfer to a small bowl or jar and refrigerate until cold, the syrup will thicken further as it cools. Meanwhile cut the berries into small bite sized pieces. Immediately before serving add the syrup to the berries and toss gently to combine. Spoon into glasses and serve.

Disney and 'Lilo' make odd couple

was by making Stitch — a six-armed creature with very sharp teeth who somehow passes for a dog, at least in the eyes of lonely Lilo — scary early on, then much more accessible as the film progresses. A good deal of that was accomplished in the film's inventive marketing campaign — on TV, theatrical trailers and sides of busses — for the past few months.

"Part of the film's marketing has been showing Stitch invading other films," says producer Clark Spencer, of the little monster appearing in redone footage from other Disney classics. "It's the idea of getting kids to know who he is before they see the film. Because if you went into the film without any understanding of this character or who he can be, you could say, 'Oh my gosh, where is this film going?' and be a little nervous about how your child may react. But I think once they have that association and get a sense that he's this mischievous character and he's funny, they'll start at a different point."

"We pitched the idea for the ad campaign," says Sanders. "We were talking about how to make people aware of the character, and I put out the idea that it's weird that this little guy we invented — that's so not a Disney character — will, in a few years, join this Disney lineup of very elite characters. It was very exciting, but in a way he's about to invade the Disney universe. And I thought, what if we just did the whole beginning of 'The Lion King' and instead of Simba, Stitch was there, and everybody in the film freaked out and ran away. And that made us laugh. And when we pitched it at our first meeting, everybody else laughed. And they said let's go further with this."

The campaign eventually also included scenes from "Beauty and the Beast," "Aladdin" and "The Little Mermaid."

The characters of Stitch and the two sisters are indirectly tied together in that none of them has parents. He doesn't really know what a family is, they are trying to bring him in to what is left of theirs. His arrival may lead to saving and repairing their damaged family.

"We wanted to portray characters with flaws and characters with great aspects in them," adds Spencer. "All of the characters in the film have both; no one is perfect. It's better to portray that as your image than to go in and try to show the perfect fairy tale world that doesn't really exist."

Unfortunately, there's also a sometimes cruel and unpleasant world that does exist. Late last summer, when production was wrapping, the film boasted a funny climactic scene in which a reformed Stitch commandeers a 747 to rescue little Lilo. Then came 9/11.

"We didn't really even have a meeting about it," says Sanders. "It was a thing that everybody just immediately felt, and we all called each other within a few hours. Even Roy Disney called in with concern and said, 'What are you guys going to do?'

"It was a rescue sequence and we thought it was exciting that people laughed at it in test screenings," he adds. "But we realized that now it would take people out of the movie. So we all just spontaneously said let's make a little adjustment. And it was accomplished very quickly. We took our digital files and sort of pounded the shape of the plane into a space ship, and we conveniently had a space ship. We were lucky that we had never shown Stitch arrive on Earth. So we had a space ship sitting out in the forest and we used it. Everybody had to work hard, but nobody was upset. Everyone said let's just make the change."

"Lilo & Stitch" opens nationally on June 21.

The battle of the bugs

Green thumbs up

Part 3

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

With an extended period of damp, dreary weather and unseasonably chilly temperatures, South Shore gardeners have all but forgotten this season's earlier concerns about drought. Suddenly, mold and rot have taken center stage as we look skyward for sunlight, not showers, and pray for summertime warmth. Many of our annual and vegetable transplants sit languishing in cold, soggy soils with an unhealthy reddish tinge to their leaves, typical of early springtime planting. Once again, Mother Nature is performing her balancing act, replenishing our water supplies and slowing down this year's accelerated growing season as the official arrival of the summertime approaches.

Like the weather, pests in the garden seem to follow a rollercoaster ride of highs and lows. Gypsy moths, tent caterpillars or spring canker worms may totally decimate our plants one season but may prove to be only a minor nuisance in subsequent years. In dry years, slugs and snails tend to be scarce in all but the shadiest spots, but when plentiful moisture arrives, these slimy creatures may devour everything in sight. No matter where you live, nature runs in cycles with extremes from season to season and what is "normal" is merely an average of the all these extremes over time.

It should be noted that many of our most annoying intruders have found their way to our gardens from other parts of the world and, once introduced, having no natural predatory controls, they reproduce at will. Birds, bugs and wild plants from all over the world have disrupted the natural order in the Americas over the centuries. Starlings, house sparrows, purple loosestrife, lily leaf beetle and an alarming number of other invaders have become a source of concern and constant irritation causing even the most mild-mannered, environmentally conscious nature-lover to consider toxic controls to combat these scourges. Each of us must determine our own level of tolerance and choose a course of action, hopefully seeking the least hazardous method of control first.

Many of the insects that invade our gardens do their damage by sucking the vitality out of our plants. Aphids, mealy bugs, scale and spider mites are often difficult to detect until plants begin to show signs of stress including wilting or yellow leaves. These telltale symptoms could also be the result of too little or too much water, nutrient deficiency or excess fertilization, or may indicate the presence of disease. Consider each possible scenario, especially current weather conditions, before grabbing a bottle of toxic chemicals. An inexpensive hand lens will often assist you in spotting some of your tiny insect intruders. Early detection is essential.

Aphids are one of the most common and easiest pests to eradicate. Numerous species are present in our gardens in a variety of colors including green, brown, black, or pink and are generally found on soft new growth. Symptoms include distorted leaves that may be puckered or curled. In addition, aphids exude a sugary secretion known as honeydew that may lead to the formation of an unattractive dusty black growth on the foliage of your plants known as sooty mold.

Mealy bugs and scale may also be present on houseplants or in the garden and often produce honeydew resulting in the appearance of sooty mold on the surrounding foliage of plants infected with these pests. Mealy bugs resemble tiny dots of cotton and scale insects are strange little intruders that hide beneath a shell and look like little bumps along the stems of woody plants that can easily be scraped off with your fingernail.

Spider mites are more difficult to detect and eliminate. They tend to be most prevalent during hot, dry weather, generally during the latter part of the summer and their telltale webs are often only visible once the infestation has become severe. Houseplants are prone to mites during the winter months in dry indoor environments.

A vigorous water spray on a routine basis is often sufficient to remove aphids and break the webs of spider mites. An application of soapy water or insecticidal soap will be slightly more potent. My preferred means of control is the application of a light horticultural oil spray, which I have found to be one of the safest and most effective means of dealing with the majority of these sucking insects. Care should be taken not to spray beneficial insects including our ladybugs that devour aphids, as they are equally vulnerable to the oil, which acts by clogging the pores of the insects thereby suffocating them.

Beetles are more troublesome pests. Their grubs devour our turf and the adults skeletonize our roses, hollyhocks, grapes, raspberries and many other trees, shrubs and perennials. Handpicking is a tedious means of eradicating some of these intruders but other controls tend to be more toxic and generally require direct contact with the beetles. Controlling grubs in the lawn with Merit will reduce their numbers but will not prevent these flying insects from traveling to your garden from other areas.

Several references are currently available that offer plant by plant information on commonly occurring problems for particular plant species. When in doubt, consult your local county extension service or bring a small sample to your local nursery in a sealed plastic bag. Creating a wildlife habitat will encourage many natural predators that will assist you in your battle against the bugs.

Proceeds benefited the new Ecozone exhibit under construction at the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell. Prior to the show, Science Center officials announced a Marshfield couple had donated $50,000 to the Ecozone effort as long as the center matched that amount in fundraising. The couple upped the ante last week by offering another $50,000 grant if the center can raise its $50,000 by the end of July. Officials said they need about $18,000 to hit that goal. Runway plan causes a stir

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

A controversial plan to build a new runway at Logan Airport has moved a step closer to becoming a reality.

Massport wants to expand Logan, because it says doing so will reduce delays.

Although the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) is supporting a "compromise" plan that would limit the runway's use to days when winds from the northwest cause delays on other Logan runways, project opponents still fear the worst.

"We will continue to fight against the runway," said State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham. "The project would be detrimental, tripling flights over the South Shore. This is a short-sighted approach to a regional transportation project."

While the final decision isn't expected to be announced until Friday by the FAA, Bradley said it's "clear the FAA is signing off on the runway in some shape or form."

Runway opponent Thomas Maloney is disturbed the runway plan appears to be moving forward.

"It's a shame for the town," he said. "Time is running out, and people need to get involved."

The South Shore Jet Pollution Council and Hingham's Jet Noise Task Force are two such avenues.

"The impacts on Hingham, regardless of what form a new runway takes, will be tremendous," Maloney said. "Over-Hingham will become the preferred route. Areas of town not affected now by jet

Police complete weapons training

They hope they never have to use their weapons and in a small town like Cohasset, a situation rarely arises which would necessitate the need of a gun. But the Cohasset police officers are still thoroughly trained in how to fire both shotguns and hand-held firearms.

"With the times we live in it's important that an officer be able to handle himself in dangerous situations," Police Chief Robert Jackson said. "I don't think we could put an officer on the street if we didn't give them a gun."

Many of the 20 full-time and four part-time officers were recently re-certified on their weapons at a qualifying session. The certification is necessary in order for the officers to be able to carry a firearm while on duty and is required for every person on the force once a year.

The officers go to the Scituate Rod and Gun Club off Route 3A for the test which is administered the Massachusetts Criminal Justice Training Council. Before their tes the officers participate in two training ses sions throughout the year.

According to Jackson, there are no grant available for the training, which the depart ment pays for. The cost is approximatel $1200 per shoot which covers the cost c ammunition for all 24 officers.

Officer Christy Tarantino, who has bee on the force for six years and is one of th two local trainers on the force, said the offi cers will normally fire 500-1000 rounds, c bullets, during their weapons test. The offi cers will also get refresher courses in gu

Town passes the water-quality test

The Cohasset Water Commission will soon release its 2002 Water Quality Report, which will be mailed to all Cohasset residents by July 1. EPA requires all water suppliers to prepare and distribute this report by this date each year.

"We are pleased to report, again, that Cohasset drinking water is in compliance with all applicable water quality standards," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission.

"We have taken many significant steps in the past year in the past year to preserve and protect the quality of Cohasset's public drinking water," McNabb said, "including the cleaning of the Bear Hill water storage tank, the flushing of the distribution system, the rehabilitation of just over 2 miles of water mains by replacing undersized mains and by cleaning and lining others, the replacement of the flocculation and sedimentation basins at the Lily Pond Treatment Plant, and the development of a long range plan, just completed, for protection of the quality of our surface water supplies."

EPA regulations require all water suppliers to report all regulated contaminants which are detected in the drinking water. During calendar year 2001, the following contaminants were detected, all within compliance of applicable water quality regulations:

Barium – detected at 0.014 parts per million (ppm), less than the Maximum Contaminant Level (MCL) of 2.0.

Fluoride – Added to the water to promote strong teeth; detected at a maximum of 1.11 ppm, less than the MCL of 4 ppm.

Chlorine – Added to disinfect water to prevent disease from microorganisms. While chlorine is required to be added to the water for public health reasons, it is important to keep chlorine levels as low as possible. "We detected a maximum of 1.95 ppm of chlorine, which is lower than the 4.0 ppm Maximum Residual Disinfection Level recommended by EPA," said McNabb.

Total Trihalomethanes (TTHM) – Byproduct from chlorination and reaction of chlorine with sediment in water mains. TTHM's were detected in the distribution system for an average of 66 ppb; which is below the MCL of 100 ppb. "Note that the MCL for TTHM's does not apply for small systems, said McNabb. "We are voluntarily testing for HAC's and TTHM's," said McNabb. "Because we are concerned about these levels and are taking steps to reduce them to provide the maximum possible protection to the people of Cohasset," said McNabb. "Since HAC's and TTHM's are caused by the reaction of chlorine and sediment in water, we expect that the flushing of the water pipes, the cleaning out of the Bear Hill tank, and the recent improvements to the Lily Pond Water Treatment plant will continue to educe the levels of HAC's and TTHM's."

Total Haloacetic Acids (HAC) – A byproduct from chlorination of water. "While HAC's were detected at 65 ppb, and the MCL is 60 ppb, this is not a violation because the MCL does not apply to small systems, under 10,000 populations, like Cohasset.

"The Water Commission is taking action to reduce HAC levels, by regular flushing of the water distribution system and by changes to the operation of the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant," McNabb said.

Lead – out of 20 locations tested in the water distribution system, only 2 of them were detected above the action level of 15 parts per billion (ppb), which is in compliance with the regulatory limit for lead.

Turbidity – a measure of the amount of sediment in the water. From daily testing, which is an overall measure of water quality, the highest turbidity detected was 0.09 NTU, lower than the regulatory limit of 5 NTU.

Copper – out of 20 locations tested, none had copper levels above the Action Level of 1.3 ppm, which is in compliance with the regulatory limit for copper.

Sodium. Detected 29.7 ppm. There is no MCL for sodium, but it is recommended that people on salt restricted diets consult with their physicians when the level is over 20 ppm. "We are taking steps to identify the sources of sodium and to reduce these levels in the future."

Sulfate. Detected 26.3 ppm. There is no MCL for sulfate, which is unregulated but which we are required to include in our regular annual tests.

"The Water Commission's consultants have just completed a is in the process of completing a comprehensive Surface Water Supply Protection Plan which will recommend a long-range plan for protection of our surface water supplies ," McNabb said.

Copies of the 2002 Water Quality Report are available at Town Hall, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, and at the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant.

Church says no to Keno

The Reverend John Maheras, who presides over the Nativity-Assumption of the Virgin Mary Church on Jerusalem Road, has written a letter to the selectmen outlining his concerns with the proposed installation of a Keno game in De Niro's restaurant.

Maheras' main concern relate to the Church's plans to erect a community center adjacent to the Church building. The community center would be a gathering place for families.

"We would expect it to be a focal point for elderly, for families planning family events where they would need a hall," he wrote.

Maheras wrote that any additional cars and traffic would add to an ever increasing burden to the traffic situation in North Cohasset.

"It is to be noted that at peak times, parking for De Niro's already spills over to Jerusalem Road and Route 228," he wrote. "If the expansion is allowed at De Niro's, it would obviously take form the limited parking they now have. This would mean that patrons would have to park either on the street, in front of the homes of the residents or in the parking area of other businesses."

Maheras continued to say that the Church also opposes the granting of Keno in De Niro's for its stated policy on the inherent dangers of gambling.

Keno, sanctioned by the lottery commission, is a game akin to Bingo. Players are given a sheet of numbers and asked to mark anywhere from one to 12 spots and can wager up to $20 on each sheet. The winning numbers are then displayed on the screen and prizes are given out based on the number of picks the player picked correctly. A new game is displayed on the Keno screen every five minutes.

The idea of sanctioned gambling in residential neighborhood did not appeal to the selectmen. The board voted unanimously to object to the installation of Keno at De Niro's Restaurant on Hull Street two weeks ago. The selectmen had 21 days to respond to the application and the case will now go before the Massachusetts Lottery Commission, which still has the authority to allow the game.

Beechwood fields

Thomas and Debbie Murphy, residents of Beechwood Street, wrote a letter to Town Manager Mark Haddad outlining their concerns about the Beechwood ball fields. Their issues center around two areas parking and lighting.

The Murphys said cars parking on both sides of the street restrict their access to their driveway. They also claimed that many cars turn in to their driveway which causes damage to both the pavement and their garden.

"When cars are parked on both sides of the street access is very difficult," the couple wrote. "Our other concern is an emergency vehicle would not be able to fit down the street when cars are parked on both sides."

There is also the lights on the basketball courts which has the Murphys upset. They wrote that people turn on the light and play at all hours and they have been forced to call the police many times.

"We have had people playing as late as 1 a.m.," they wrote. "We would request that there be no light at the courts and a restriction of its use after 10 p.m."

Meeting schedule

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall as of Monday, June 24.

School bus service back on the block

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The bus company that got high marks from the school department is pulling out of Cohasset.

Although Joseph Ingle Bus Service Inc. will still provide the runs for school athletics and some field trips, the regular bus routes could go back in-house or be provided by another company.

Stephen Ingle, who heads Hanover-based Ingle Bus Service, would stay in Cohasset if he could use his own buses., he said in a telephone interview.

"That way I have control," Ingle said referring to maintenance and insurance issues he has had with the Cohasset fleet over the past two years.

Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey said the school department offered Ingle a third year with a financial adjustment, including a review of insurance provisions and replacement of vehicles, but disposing of the fleet that includes two 1999 buses was not a viable option at this time.

Malvey said providing school transportation including athletics and a special education bus runs about $200,000 a year. Plans are to put the service out to bid, however bringing it in-house again is an option.

Now the school department has a full-time business manager, Malvey said in-house service would have better management than in past years and possibly be cheaper than contracting it out. Two years ago, the school department opted to hire a contractor to provide bus service using the Cohasset-owned fleet and awarded the bid to Ingle.

Malvey said any outstanding issues with Ingle have "always been amicably resolved."

Plans are to put the service out to bid, however bringing it in-house again is an option.

But Ingle, who offered the Cohasset drivers jobs when he came on board two years ago, is concerned about liability because the buses aren't his. He is also frustrated because he says he's never had an official contract, just the bid documents that he signed.

"I never got an agreement saying they accepted my offer," he said.

Malvey described the flap as a "non issue." He explained the bid document is a contract. There was also a problem when the paperwork for a student van that was left off the master list as the insurance was renewed last year, but the situation was immediately rectified as soon as the oversight was discovered. Malvey noted the town, not the school department, takes care of the insurance and registration on all school and town vehicles.

But, nevertheless, Ingle wasn't comfortable with the answers he received.

"I do not wish to continue to operate their vehicles when over two years, I haven't been able to get required documents," he said, adding if something happened, he wasn't sure who would be liable.

Malvey described Ingle's protestations as a "smokescreen" saying for business reasons, he want's his own vehicles and that's the issue.

Nevertheless both the school department and Ingle had positive things to say.

The transportation subcommittee that examined the busing issue and is made up of members of the School Committee and school administration wrote to Ingle, "The committee is most anxious to continue your services as we are all pleased with the quality of your service.

Ingle, who provides bus service to Hanover and Rockland public schools and several private schools, said he's had a good experience in Cohasset. He said ridership was way up and the company had a great relationship with the parents.

"But I have plenty of work to do here," he said about his business. " It's enough to keep me busy."

Private trash haulers may have to recycle

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

About 400 of the 3,000 households in town don't use the Recycling Transfer Facility, dubbed the RTF, but hire private haulers to remove their trash.

But the Recycling Committee would like to require the six private haulers in town to recycle.

"It would mean more state grant money for the town for recycling," said Selectman Merle Brown, who is also a member of the Recycling Committee. "And they should be doing it anyway."

A year ago, the town started the Pay As You Throw system where residents have to pay for special blue trash bags. The theory behind "buck-a-bag" is that people will use fewer bags and recycle more. The program is working and recycling is way up, Brown said. Tonnage sent to SEMASS, the incinerator in Rochester, Mass., is down some 10,000 pounds a month.

So the next logical step, for Brown and the Recycling Committee, is to get everyone in town to recycle.

Haulers would be required to submit weight slips on a regular basis that showed a minimum recycling effort of 20 percent.

John McNabb, a water commissioner and Recycling Committee member, pointed out at last week's selectmen's meeting with more recycling in the state there would be less need for landfills.

His remarks followed questions by Selectman Ronnie McMorris who wasn't sure what the town's interest would be in requiring private haulers to recycle. They don't use the RTF but take the trash out of town.

The Board of Health issues permits the private haulers, but the selectmen would be charged with enforcement of recycling regulations.

Brown said the haulers would be required to submit weight slips on a regular basis that showed a minimum recycling effort of 20 percent. At the RTF, residents recycle 45-50 percent of their trash, he said.

Recycling would be a condition of the permit, which could be pulled if the hauler does not recycle, McNabb explained.

Plans are to invite the private haulers to a selectmen's meeting later this summer to discuss making recycling mandatory. If selectmen go with the requirement, private haulers would have several months to comply and come up with a plan showing how they would handle recycling with their customers.

Water restrictions for North Cohasset

Based upon the extremely dry period in late April and may and the continued high water demands, the Massachusetts-American Water Company, which serves 600 customers in North Cohasset, is advising its customers in Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset to continue to use water wisely and efficiently during this upcoming summer season and is implementing mandatory odd-even outside watering restrictions. Outside water use is now limited to between 5 and 9 a.m. and 6 to 10 p.m. on an odd/even schedule consistent with street address number.

Eileen Commane, Operations Manager for the Company said "Recent rainfall has helped curb demand but the 30 plus days of little or no rainfall in late April and May has caused water demands to remain higher than normal. As such, it is especially important that customers use water as efficiently as possible and manage outside water use consistent with the mandatory odd/even schedule."

Zoning proposals sought by July 8

The Zoning Advisory Committee (ZAC) will accept proposed zoning amendments for analysis and recommendation to the Planning Board until July 8. Please submit a brief description of your zoning change and/or draft language by fax 781-383-7087; email: ebhtownplanner@aol.com; or mail to the Planning Board at Town Hall.

The purpose of the ZAC is to study and report periodically to the Planning Board to recommend updates to the zoning bylaw and zoning map.

The purpose of the ZAC is to study and report periodically to the Planning Board to recommend updates to the zoning bylaw and zoning map. Given the level of interest from various boards, commissions and individuals regarding possible zoning changes, the ZAC will place an annual call for zoning proposals. A submission deadline several months in advance of town meeting enables the ZAC adequate time to provide thoughtful recommendations to the Planning Board for possible town meeting action.

The ZAC is an ad-hoc committee of the Planning Board consisting of the following members: Al Moore, Planning Board; Ben Lacy, Zoning Board;; Merle Brown, Board of Selectmen; Veneta Roebuck, Conservation Commission; Rich Henderson, Citizen Member; Mark DeGiacomo, Citizen Member; Liz Harrington, Town Planner; and Bob Egan, Building Commissioner.

New Logan Airport runway plan causes a stir noise and pollution will be affected by both landings and take-offs."

Referring to lawsuits filed against the proposed runway, Bradley thinks it's unfortunate that the issue will be decided through the court system rather than the public policy arena.

One lawsuit was filed in Suffolk Superior Court to lift a 1976 injunction blocking construction of a new runway and another lawsuit filed in Plymouth County by Hingham, Cohasset, Hull, and Revere challenging Massport's environmental findings.

Cohasset voters appropriated $30,000 toward the runway lawsuit at their annual Town Meeting in March, bringing that town's total for the runway fight to $78,500.

In April, Hingham Town Meeting voters supported a warrant article calling for appropriating an additional $100,000 to fight the project, bringing its total to $178,500.

While project opponents are hopeful they'll win in the end, Massport spokeswoman Barbara Platt recently told the Hingham Journal she believes the project "will stand on its own merits."

While the FAA claims air traffic congestion would be relieved by the construction of a new runway, opponents cite noise and air pollution as key reasons to stop the project from moving forward.

There are other concerns as well.

"With no public oversight, what is the enforcement mechanism which will hold Massport to its word (once a final decision is made regarding the runway)?" Bradley asks. "The FAA and Massport will decide how it will be used once the ground is broken, and I have no faith that if they say it will only be used under certain conditions that that will be how the runway is actually used."

Project opponent Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, shares Bradley's concerns.

"I thought all along we would end up with a runway in some form despite opposition to it," he said. "It almost seems that because of the other issues the FAA appears to be addressing, including peak pricing and limiting runway use based on the wind's direction, that there's a recognition of the impacts. It appears the FAA is looking for a political middle ground, but I don't believe there is such a thing in this case. The FAA shouldn't be making a political decision, and to a degree, that may be what's happening."

Hedlund, like Bradley, plans to continue opposing the runway.

"There's a nice coalition of political leaders in a number of communities who are together on this, and I think they'll hang tough," he said.

Bradley thinks the $100 million allocated to the project should be put instead toward increasing capacity at another regional airport as well as airport security.

"We need to look at a major airport in the Worcester/Springfield area," he said. "Why would anyone want to put a runway in an airport that's already at capacity (referring to Logan)?"

Besides, notes Bradley, issues related to security have taken precedence over ones surrounding delays since the events of September 11.

"It can take an hour to get through security, and rightly so," Bradley said.

CMHS food court slated

No one understands that better than officials at Chartwells School Dining Services, a North Carolina-based company that has had the food-service contract in Cohasset for about a dozen years.

The price of a full school meal will go up about 15 cents next fall to $2.15 for students and $2.40 for teachers, but Chartwell officials think hungry students and faculty will ante up for the new fare.

"Our customers have become much more sophisticated in the past several years," the Chartwells' "Profiles in Good Taste" brochure states. "People are dining out more and eating at home less.

"In this new environment, school lunch is endlessly compared to the retail food marketplace and inspires all of us to compete."

Thanks to the school building project, which is underway, the middle-high school cafeteria will be brand-new in the fall, a factor that will facilitate the introduction of the new concept in school lunches.

Chartwells is restructuring the traditional "straight" hot lunch line into unique "stations" that include Fresh Grille for hamburgers, chicken sandwiches and the like; Trattoria for classic Italian fare including homemade pizza and calzones; Origins, for a traditional hot lunch with casseroles and vegetables; Sandwich Central and OutTakes for deli sandwiches and wraps and Components for entree accompaniments such as tossed salad, fruit and rolls.

The goal is to bring a more professional and retail look by focusing on food quality and presentation, Chartwells officials say.

The meals will all have the various components and food groups required by the federal government for schools, Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey said.

"No matter what station you go to, the meal is still in compliance," he said.

The price hike will help pay for more part-time helpers needed for the new stations, Malvey said.

He explained the new offerings will "trickle down" to the Deer Hill and Osgood schools because all the food is prepared at the middle-high school and shipped to the elementary schools.

Malvey said he's confident the new menu will be a hit with faculty and students alike.

"The hope is that few will brown bag it," he said. The other big change is elimination of the open campus for seniors. Seniors had been allowed to leave the high school during lunch.

"That concept has seen its day," Malvey said. "There were no glaring problems with it – and the change is not punitive." He said the School Committee was in total agreement about eliminating the practice of allowing seniors off campus during lunch.

"There's no need for it, we're not a college campus," Malvey said.

Chartwells showed the school department "before and after" photographs of the cafeteria at Lexington High School where the food service company's "Profiles in Good Taste" has been launched. Attractive wall-mounted signs identify each station in the food court.

Chartwells served 127,622 meals in Cohasset schools last year for total revenue of $261,350. It expects to serve 133,562 meals next school year with revenue projections of $304,484. The company reported a small profit of $600 this past school year.

Cohasset Harbor 'Friends' group hopes to make a splash

By Steven Profaizer
CORRESPONDENT

To a relatively new grassroots group in town, having a user-friendly harbor means keeping it just the way it is.

To that end, the Friends of Cohasset Harbor that formed earlier this year hosted a meeting last week at the Lightkeepers' Residence – which has one of the most spectacular harbor views in town – to garner support for its cause.

The Friends members say they are in an ongoing struggle with the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, which numbers wealthy businessman Peter Roy among its backers. Roy owns Kimballs by the Sea, the Olde Salt House, Atlantica and the Mill River Marine Railway, all harbor businesses.

The Friends say the CRC is intent on making certain renovations to harbor in order to make it more aesthetically pleasing to the growing number of tourists, who visit Cohasset each year. In fact, Atlantica, Kimballs and the Old Salt House are now being marketed as the Cohasset Harbor Resort.

The major issues of the "Friends" meeting revolved around new parking arrangements, lampposts, sidewalks, and fences proposed by CRC.

"Some sidewalks and other pieces of town property do have problems," said Sam Knox, co-founder of "Friends". "There does need to be some maintenance performed, but maintenance is the key word.

"There are some things which need improvement in the harbor," he said. "But there is just no demand for the revitalization CRC is proposing."

The "Friends" say CRC should produce a definitive agenda and to place it into public forums for discussion.

"The community generously pays many town officials to run the town how the townspeople want it to be run – not how someone who can gather enough funds wants it to be run," Knox said.

During the course of the meeting, many said CRC was uninterested in their opinions regarding the matters at hand.

"When [CRC] asks the public's opinion on an issue, they develop a menu of choices and that's what we have to pick from," Knox said. "We have nothing to do with the making of the menu; we're stuck with what they give us."

Dean Rizzo, CRC director, did not attend the meeting but said in a later interview, while Roy is one of the primary supporters of the non-profit group, several other residents and businesses have contributed large sums of money to the harbor effort.

"It's true that Peter Roy owns a majority of the harbor-area businesses," Rizzo said. "Personally, I would rather have this situation where the owner lives in the community and is generously investing in the community rather than an absentee landlord that cares very little about his property, nor the public infrastructure around it."

Rizzo said the fear of rising tourism because of infrastructure improvements is unfounded.

"The natural beauty, character and history of the harbor environment, as well as the availability of quality goods and services by local businesses are what people have been coming to Cohasset for decades to enjoy," he said. "More people will not start to come in greater numbers simply because the community improves pedestrian safety and access conditions around the harbor."

Rizzo also defended the CRC's improvement options and design information packets that were developed with public input. He said the goal was to distill all the various comments into three distinct and clear improvement approaches to be considered.

Towards the end of the "Friends' meeting, the focus shifted towards what each person could do as an individual to support preserving the harbor. A list of 11 phone numbers belonging to key people in the decision-making process regarding the issues at hand was distributed to all those in attendance.

"I implore each of you to contact these people to express you feelings," Richard Karoff, co-founder of "Friends," said. "They've all heard from me; they need to hear from new people."

The "Friends" group says a little attention is all the harbor needs.

"We're not looking to be controversial," said Sandy Manzella of the Friends. "We're all for sprucing up the town a little, but we're not looking to spend millions doing it."

Friends' members say they will continue to meet on a regular basis.

"We just want to maintain the quality of life that is now in the Cohasset harbor," Knox said. "It is a nice place to live and raise children; that's why we moved here and that's how we want it to stay."

For more information regarding the Friends of Cohasset's mission or opportunities to become involved contact Sam Knox at fch143@hotmail.com.

Book signing is Saturday

Author Jacqueline Dormitzer will sign copies of "Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume III" at Veterans Park Saturday from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Because there will not be enough time before this first signing to mail books to those who have ordered them in advance, the town history committee will have extra books on hand.

For those who do not attend the signing, the committee intends to mail books next week to all those who have ordered and paid for them. There will be additional opportunities to get the book signed, including July 10 from 7-9 p.m. at Buttonwood Books.

Buttonwood hosts Dormitzer signing

Buttonwood Books & Toys will host Jacqueline M. Dormitzer who will sign her book the "Narrative History of Cohasset", Volume III on Wednesday, July 10 from 7-9 p.m. in Cohasset. This book chronicles Cohasset history from 1950 to 2000 and is packed with the people, pictures and events that made Cohasset history. The newly released Volume III of Cohasset history is a wonderful keepsake for family and friends. It is filled with vivid images of the postwar, Vietnam and Gulf War periods as well the individuals and stories that shaped the last half-century. $32.

Author Dormitzer knows Cohasset well, both as a 35 year-old resident and as an involved citizen. She grew up in Chicago and graduated from Wellesley College, where she majored in French. Dormitzer and her husband, Ralph, moved to Cohasset in 1967 and raised two sons. Reservations are requested for seating and refreshment planning. Please call 781-383-2665 to reserve or to order your signed copy if unable to attend.

Benefit dinner for discovery museum

Celebrity Chef Anthony Ambrose is creating a special dinner menu to benefit Our World, the new children's discovery museum set to open in Cohasset in the fall of 2003.

The dinner will be held July 1, at 6:30 p.m. at Atlantica Restaurant, 44 Border St.. Tickets are $125 each with a portion of the proceeds going to the non-profit Our World Inc. Reservations are required at 781-383-0300.

Ambrose, a Cohasset resident, is chef-owner of Ambrosia on Huntington in Boston. He and his wife, Dorene, are parents of two small children and vitally interested in the museum project.

Leah Taylor Roy and Mary Larson are in the midst of a $1 million fundraising campaign to construct the museum and an associated global-themed playground in a two story wing of the former Joseph Osgood School. The two Cohasset residents view the project as a way to bring cultural diversity to the area.

The town's new library will occupy the rest of the former school building, which is located at the corner of Ripley Road and Sohier Street. Roy and Larson believe the museum will be the perfect tie-in for the library.

Chernobyl benefit dance a hit

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

For many, the only apparent similarity between Cohasset and Russia is that they both have "a" in the spelling of their names. But soon the two destinations though thousands of miles apart on the map, will share more than a letter.

Cohasset will soon welcome two Russian teenagers, who will come to town for a month as part of the Chernobyl Children project.

"After learning about the disaster they really wanted to help in anyway they could."

— Sharon Chase

Though the two teens haven't arrived yet, they've already made an impact on at least one group in town. A seventh-grade class at the Deer Hill School, led by special education teacher Sharon Chase, organized a dance for the project and is donating all proceeds for the cause. It costs about $1300 to bring one child over to America for a month and this year the project will be shuttling 130 kids to the New England area.

The dance, held Tuesday night at St. Anthony's Church, featured a large sundae bar for the kids to gorge on followed by entertainment provide by DJ Scott Ripatrazone. The seventh-grade class secured the ice cream and various toppings from the generous donations of local restaurants such as Stop 'N Shop, Papa Ginos, French Memories and Strawberry Parfait, and also procured the dance space and the DJ for free.

"The kids came up with the idea for the dance, they were so enthusiastic about it," Sharon said. "After learning about the disaster they really wanted to help in anyway they could."

Sharon brought in speakers to talk about the meltdown and has conducted several of lessons on it which has piqued the students interest.

"They always asking me questions about it," she said. "I was really amazed about how into it they were."

Sharon added the students are very excited to eventually meet the children who they're helping.

"It's one thing to just give some money to a charity," she said. "It's another to see the fruits of your labor."

The 1986 disaster has left a legacy of radiation-related illnesses for this generation and generations to come. While accurate statistics are impossible to come by in Russia, the former Soviet government claimed the Chernobyl death toll is 41, some estimates have that number as high as 15,000 and thousands more are battling a variety of cancers from radiation exposure.

The radiation impact to the region surrounding the nuclear plant was equivalent to the detonation of 20 atomic bombs and it isn't going away anytime soon.

That's one of the reasons the Chernobyl Children project was formed. Started in 1991, the project gives children raised in that region a respite in America where they can receive world-class medical care in Boston and live free of the radiation that is so deadly to them.

To take part in the program, all of the children in the project have a high level of radiation detected in their bodies and nearly all have been sick. Some receive treatment in Boston hospitals, most notably the floating hospital, and others who are now in remission may just have routine check ups from local physicians and dentists.

Through the program Chernobyl children form lasting ties with their American families and are instilled with new hope for the future.

That's the hope of Mary Ann Chase, mother-in-law of Sharon and the soon-to-be host of the two teenage boys.

Mary Ann read an article about the project in an area newspaper and was profoundly affected.

"It just hit me," she said. "It felt like it was the right thing to do."

The visiting kids, who have been characterized as the "forgotten children", almost all suffer from a different type of cancer and most notably, thyroid cancer. Mary Ann, who is a pediatric occupational therapist, said that for many of the children, this could be their last summer.

"It's really quite sad," she said. "I just wanted to do something, anything to help."

Mary Ann, whose four children with range in age from 32 to 41 and left the house sometime ago, said she is a bit anxious about the children's arrival.

"The biggest barrier is going to be language," she said. "We don't speak any Russian and they don't speak any English, it's definitely going to be a struggle."

She added she has been listening to Russian tapes to try and pick up the difficult language, but its proved to be futile.

"I haven't accomplished a thing," she admitted.

However, the Chernobyl Children project does provide a interpreter for the family which is available 24-hours a day. However, Mary Ann said she has been practicing her charades.

"I just don't want them to be bored," she said. "I think I'm going to have to borrow a Nintendo or something."

The children's project does extensive research on the kids and also provides them with plenty of activities to participate in during their stay. There are a harbor cruise, a trip to Landsdowne Street, tickets to a Revolution soccer game along with various social functions and dinners.

AT&T may not be best answer for school Web connection

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

AT&T Broadband is just waiting for the call. The company, which recently celebrated connecting its 1,000 New England school to the Internet for free, said it will happily connect Cohasset once the school renovation projects are completed.

AT&T Broadband, which has provided cable television to the schools for the last 12 years, originally hooked up the schools to a high-speed Internet connection three years ago but offered only two connections, one in the library and one in the superintendent's office. The wires were cut in the ensuing construction projects.

"We will absolutely offer the reconnect the service after the buildings are done."
— Lou Russo, AT&T Broadband

"We will absolutely offer the reconnect the service after the buildings are done," said Lou Russo, manager of government affairs for AT&T Broadband. "When they say they're ready, we'll be there."

This issue of internet access in schools has been something AT&T Broadband has looked into for some time.

"We realize the technology we provide is a valuable resource for the teachers and children of Cohasset," a press release stated. "We offer to connect them to a world of educational content that enriches the learning experience."

The "Cable in the Classroom" program, which has been a part of Cohasset schools for more than a decade, offers commercial free cable programs from stations such as CNN, TLC, the History Channel and others to participating schools. This program was the impetus for AT&T's current program "Education Connections" which offers free Internet service.

However, Ken Cisneros, technology director for the middle-high school, said he doesn't think the school will sign up for AT&T Broadband's service once the construction projects are completed.

"I don't think AT&T is as reliable as our system," he said.

All three Cohasset schools currently run on a T1 connection, which is faster than a dial-up modem but is not the highest available speed for Internet connection. Cisneros said once the renovations are completed, he hopes all of the schools will be hooked up to fiber-optic cables, the optimum speed for Internet connections.

One of the reasons Cisneros is happy with the current system is that the Cohasset school district currently runs its Internet connection through the South Shore Collaborative, a group of schools located south of Boston. While Cisneros admitted that this sometimes causes a delay in the server, having to bounce emails to the collaborative and back, the technical assistance it provides is crucial.

"We can have a tech guy here whenever we need it," he said. "You have to wait forever with AT&T."

Currently, the schools only have the capacity to send data over computers but Cisneros hopes in a few years that will change. He hopes to be able to send voice and video streams over the Cohasset lines in a few years.

"Teachers will be able to conduct lectures on-line if they want," he said. "It will be a great tool."

Another technological advance that Cisneros is investigating is a program called "I-Pass'. This would allow parents to log into the school's server and determine attendance records, grades and even which class their child is sitting in.

At the new schools, there will be seven computer labs boasting about 20-30 computers each. Every classroom will also have a connection.

"It's important for the teachers to be able to jump on-line," Cisneros said. "It's a huge educational tool."

Along with the I-Pass program for parents, Cisneros envisions teachers being able to go to a Web based grading system.

"Eventually, all homework will be on there as well," he said.

New school Web sites have come on line

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Even though Cohasset students have left the halls of the town's three schools for the summer, there is still a way they can keep up on their respective institutions.

Ken Cisneros, the technology director of the school system, has been working diligently on Web sites for the schools which can now be accessed online. The site has been up and running for about two weeks now.

Each school has its own interface and each offers a variety of amenities to the user.

Cisneros said the process started about four years ago when a student took the initiative and starting creating a page for the high school. After she graduated, Cisneros kept up her page and began exploring the possibility of creating a larger database for the school system.

"I've had a lot of people who have called me up in the past asking about where they could find information about our schools," he said. "In this day and age to not have a working Web site is really a disadvantage."

Cisneros, who has been working on various Internet sites for close to a decade, said he has spent countless hours on the schools' site. He visited other school Web pages for ideas of what to include and found some guidelines for how to build a successful school page.

"You want something that's easy to navigate," he said. "People should be able to find what they want quickly."

Cisneros also wanted to put information on the site which would prove to be useful to prospective teachers and students such as directions to the school, updated staff lists, and other such luxuries.

"It will make communication between the schools and the students and parents much easier."
— School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn

He said in the near future he hopes there will be a teacher in each school who is in charge of keeping their respective Internet pages updates. He added it's important to have the site looking professional.

"Some of these schools have Web pages that look like their years old," he said. "It just doesn't reflect on the school that well."

Rick Flynn, chairman of the school committee, thinks its terrific that Cisneros has dedicated so much time to the Web pages and feels he has done a great job. He hopes in the future the pages can become even more interactive with teachers and students easily communicating online.

"People have become so dependant on the Internet that it's almost necessary to have our own site," he said. "It will make communication between the schools and the students and parents much easier."

Starting on the main page for Cohasset Public Schools, an Internet surfer will find a grouping of pictures of the schools and a menu listing 17 different options from which to choose. From job openings, to policies, to a link for the superintendent, the page has enough information for even the diehard Cohasset school fan.

The Joseph Osgood School boasts its mission on its front page which states, "through a supportive learning community which values each learner as an individual, we encourage maximum achievement. We strive to honor good citizenship, ethical and responsible behavior and the love of learning."

The Osgood page has more than 20 different links on its home page. It has links for the principal, the schedule, the newsletter and handbook, links for each department including art, physical education, music, special education and technology. Browsing the page you can click on the button for the curriculum or supplies and each grade, including the kindergarten, has its own separate Web site.

The Deer Hill School also has more than 20 different options on its initial site including links to the lunch menu, student services, and the school nurse. Each grade also has its own page.

The middle-high school has many of the same options as the other two schools but also has a list of the course offering students can choose from. It also has links to its philosophy, support services and school newspaper.

The address for the Web page is www.ssec.org/cohasset/default.htm.

Police sharpen weapon skills at target practice safety and cleaning.

"We don't want the officers to be afraid of their guns," Tarantino said. "They should feel comfortable with their weapons."

The members on Cohasset's police force are required to receive a minimum score of 80 on their test, which translates into hitting a target with 80 percent of the rounds they fire. The officers are trained in the handling of both their side arm, a 40-caliber handgun and a shotgun.

"Most of the officers will only need the handgun training," Jackson said. "But we offer the shotgun certification just so our officers have some advanced knowledge of weaponry."

Tarantino said while the requirements from the Massachusetts council promote accurate shooting from both the kneeling and standing positions, it does not teach officers to deal with the pressure of a dangerous situation. Tarantino participated in an Active Shooter program conducted by the State Police in which the officers were put in such a predicament.

Local law enforcement officers were presented with a scenario in which a school was held hostage. Going up, officers were instructed to "free the hostages" while being fired at with regular guns loaded with paint balls.

"I was so sore after that and had so many welts on my body," Tarantino said. "It was the best training exercise I've ever been through, I hope the whole force can go through it sometime soon.

Chief Jackson said he hope to start training his force in non-lethal weapons sometime in September or October.

The Massachusetts Criminal Justice Training Council serves the various communities in the Commonwealth by providing formal training and personal development programs to municipal police offers. The mission of the MCJTC is to develop and deliver training, to set and enforce training standards, and to provide record keeping services regarding training to the local police departments.

The council recognizes that police work has become more advanced and realizes that officers are asked to handle some of societies difficult problems.

"If law enforcement officers in Massachusetts are to be able to work on solving these problems, they will need to have the most sophisticated training," states the council on its Web site. "The training will have to provide strategies for solving these and the MCJTC is committed to raising the quality of the training course delivered."

OPINION

GUEST EDITORIAL

History book is a great read

In 1950, Cohasset was a semi-rural working village of 3,700 people with a fancy fringe of well-to-do summer residents and a median family income 26 percent lower than the state median.

By the end of the 1990s, Cohasset was a picture postcard commuter suburb of 7,300 year-round residents with a median family income 68 percent higher than the state's.

How we got from there to here is a fascinating tale full of interesting and outspoken characters.

That tale has been well researched and beautifully set down by Jacqueline Dormitzer in the "Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume III," often in the very voice of those characters.

The story has everything — action, intrigue, conflict, humor, show business, politics and even an occasional whiff of scandal. And it's coming to a bookstore near you this week.

The main character, Cohasset, seems like a good looking, down to earth farm girl who becomes prettier, richer, better dressed and better educated as the story progresses.

Sure, things get lost along the way and many in town rightly mourn them. Innocence, of course, but everybody's lost that.

You will see the Grange along with most of the old neighborhood and ethnic social clubs decline and disappear through the years, then watch a myriad of athletic, artistic and civic organizations spring up to fill that sociable void.

You will observe how voters adapt and expand town government as the world becomes an increasingly complex, regulated and litigious place.

You will be riveted as divisive issues set neighbor against neighbor, newcomer against "townie" — zoning, sewers, Vietnam, schools, sewers, charters, development, landfills, trains, sewers. (In fact, there's probably not a piece of turf in Cohasset that hasn't been fought over at one time or another.)

But after each dustup is resolved one way or another, you will see rifts somehow heal, people start talking to each other again and the town progress.

You will see the train disappear near the beginning of the story and then head on back toward the end.

The town history committee has been working toward this week for the past five and a half years and it is with great joy that we present the "Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume III" to the people of Cohasset. It is our fondest wish that you will buy it, read it, enjoy it and perhaps learn from it.

For the town history committee,
— Molly Hochkeppel Pierson

Making water bills user-friendly

The Cohasset Water Commission is looking for public comment on how to improve their water bills.

"We want to see how to make our water bills more informative, more useful, and more user-friendly," said chairman John McNabb.

The Water Commission is looking for any and all comments from their customers on how their bills can be improved, including suggestions on what additional information needs to be in the bill, how to make the bills easier to read and to understand, and any other ideas that Cohasset residents may have.

Cohasset residents are invited to send their suggestions, in writing, to the Water Commission no later than June 30. Comments may be faxed to the Water Department at 781-383-2906, mailed to 339 King St., Cohasset, or emailed to McNabb at mcnabbj@mindspring.com.

HEALTH NOTES

Making homes and yards safer

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Environmental Awareness Committee of the Garden Club Federation of Massachusetts has put out an interesting booklet. It's called "WE CARE, Handbook and Suggestions for Daily Pollution Prevention.." In it, there are numerous suggestions for making life in our suburban homes and yards safer and healthier.

For example the book quotes the Boston Globe's Carol Stoker: "By trying to make our lawns look like a putting green, we've turned them into invalids under expensive life support." But more important, pesticides in fertilizers and other maintenance products can kill beneficial as well as harmful insects, and be dangerous to your health.

These artificially maintained lawns put at risk children who play on them, squirrels, chipmunks, and other wildlife which use them, and the birds which land on them and pick their food from them. It makes no sense to have a lawn which is more expensive, dangerous and less attractive than the natural alternative. According to WE CARE, it makes sense to prioritize your property and care for (by watering) high value plantings including trees and shrubs which have taken years to develop. Next would come perennials and newer shrubs, and finally will come the lawn, which, even if it doesn't get water, goes dormant and springs back to life as soon as it rains. I find that the two things that can take care of themselves with minimum maintenance, are the lawn, and the rocks.

It makes no sense to have a lawn which is more expensive, dangerous and less attractive than the natural alternative.

Indoors

Many of the suggestions continued in this thin booklet, we ignore at our peril. For example, the book says that our exposure to toxic pollutants is between 10 and 50 times higher indoors than it is outdoors. Look at those chemicals under your sink. Regulators impose the following guidelines for labels:

DANGER and POISON - Indicates that the product's active ingredient is highly toxic and could be fatal.

WARNING - One spoonful could be fatal.

SLIGHTLY TOXIC - Indicates that it takes two spoonfuls to be deadly.

CAUTION - Product could be carcinogenic or have pesticides that persist in the environment.

CARPETS - are harbingers for all kinds of pollutants. Apparently only frequent rigorous vacuuming (with a power head) can reduce the pollutants entering the air from carpets.

PETS - We purchase and apply a vast array of chemicals to kill ticks and fleas, and take our pets to the vet to be dipped in chemicals. Many of the chemicals used to kill insects can have the same effect on the nervous system of children and the pets themselves. It is vital to use no more than the minimum required to control the specific pest. Generally, the use of chemicals can be reduced considerably by frequent bathing and brushing.

Children are especially vulnerable to many of the toxins in sprays and insecticides used in the garden and on your pets, and which are brought indoors to your carpets. A child's nervous system is under development, and their daily activities bring them into close contact with lawns, pets, carpets.

We do many things in ignorance which contribute unknowingly to our problems.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Many thanks for Festival support

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the South Shore Art Center, we would like to thank the hundreds of people who made the 47th annual Arts Festival on the Common such a success. In spite of the weather challenges on the first two days, Festival ended with thousands of people on the Cohasset Common enjoying art, craft, music, and sunshine.

While we can't thank everyone in this note, there are a number of people who lift us up and make our jobs a lot easier. These individuals, we can't thank enough: Beverly Bielewicz, our volunteer coordinator, who coordinated over 200 volunteer hours; Mary Foley, who with little guidance handles most of the details of the Young Artists' Exhibition; Beth Myers West of Springbrook Kids; Vince Longo, South Shore Music Circus; Mark Haddad, Ellen Wynne, and Dr. Godzik at Town Hall; Chief Jackson and the Cohasset Police Department; Chief Lincoln and the Cohasset Fire Department; Rod Hobson and the First Parish Church; Supt. Ted Malvey and Paul Callahan; Carl Sestito and the Cohasset DPW; Dan Belz, Atlantic Bagel; Anthony and Lydia Everett; David Hassan; Glenn Pratt; Pat Cannon; Sarah Roche; Susan McNamara; Tina Watson; Ronnie Goodwin, Goodwin Graphics; Graham Waste Services; and Chris Draves and the Scituate Boy Scouts, Troop 5. The Art Center's gallery artists and faculty keep the "art" in all we do throughout the year; thanks to Liz Heywood Sullivan for her extraordinary involvement in Festival 2002 and to Jeanne Replogle, Margaret McWethy, and many others.

Special thanks to our event sponsors: Debbie and John Flanagan, Edward Jones Investments; Eliot and Carole Siegel, Macy's Beachway Liquors; Joe and Andrea Kinnealey, Kinnealey Meats; Lorraine Bachman, On The Rocks Catering; Hingham Institution for Savings; South Shore Hospital; Image Resolutions; Broughton Charitable Foundation; Megan, Caroline and Chris Pratt; Peacock Press; and Hingham Mutual Fire Insurance Company.

We have received many compliments on the wonderful music that entertained us all throughout the weekend—bravo and thank you to Joe Armstrong, Ana Buckley and her family, Howie Altholtz and friends, the Choral Art Society, Hingham High School Jazz Ensemble, Sally Slade Warner, and Mary Kennedy.

The Festival principal sponsors—Fleet and Community Newspaper Company — make it possible for the Art Center to present one of the premier outdoor Festivals in the northeast and raise money to support the ongoing education and exhibition programs at the Center.

Thanks again to everyone — is it too early to place an order for 3 days of sunshine, June 13, 14, 15, 2003?

Jason Road

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to express my opposition to changing Robert E. Jason Road to a walkway.

Bob Jason was one of the first men from this town to lose his life in the service. His mother, father and sister were so proud to have a road named in his honor.

His mother and father both spent their entire lives in Cohasset. His grandfather was highway superintendent for many years.

I am very disappointed that many people who did not know him or his family are suggesting that his road be changed to a walkway.

Support bill for fire prevention

TO THE EDITOR:

Cigarette-ignited fires are the leading cause of fatal home fires in the United States. Annually, 900-1,000 people in the U.S., including more than 100 children die from cigarette-ignited fires and an additional 2,500-3,000 are injured, often severely. During the 1990s in Massachusetts, there were 178 deaths, 763 civilian injuries, and more than $75 million in property damage. Unfortunately, many victims of these fires are people who do not smoke—children and other innocent bystanders.

Cigarettes are designed to continue burning when left unattended. The typical scenario is the delayed ignition of a sofa, chair or mattress that is forgotten or dropped by a smoker. Designing cigarettes that are less likely to start a fire is not difficult and is already available.

There has been an ongoing national and state effort to establish legislation to create cigarette fire-safety standards. The term, "fire safe" refers to a cigarette with reduced propensity for starting a fire when dropped or left unattended. This knowledge has been available or 10 years. In 2000, legislation was enacted in New York mandating all cigarettes sold or offered for sale meet a fire-safety standard. Studies show that making cigarettes fire-safe would not affect taste, cost or health hazards associated with smoking.

In 1980, long-term advocate, the late Joseph Moakley first introduced in the U.S. House of Representatives a bill focusing directly on cigarette fire-safety. At the present time, we are close to making our state safer with Senate Bill 1916 (The Moakley Bill). This bill is stuck in committee and will die there unless concerned citizens of Massachusetts take a stand.

This is not an anti-smoking bill but a fire-prevention effort!

Please encourage your state representative to support Senate Bill 1916 (The Moakley Bill).

Generous grant

TO THE EDITOR:

Once again, the South Shore Playhouse Associates have granted the Cohasset High School Arts Boosters a generous grant of $1,000. This grant will help to fund our operating expenses for the upcoming school year. The money raised by Arts Boosters goes directly to the students in the form of enriching the arts curriculum with extra supplies, paying entry fees for drama competitions, and granting requests from the teachers for special events or projects which are not included in the school budget This grant will enable us to begin the year on a sound financial basis.

The South Shore Playhouse Associates and the South Shore Music Circus are true assets to the town of Cohasset. The faculty, students and parents of Cohasset High School thank them for their generosity and sincerely hope that the 2002 season will be a huge success.

So what's in a name? Plenty!

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Voters in the 1954 state election, surveying their ballots for the first time, were mildly surprised to learn that John F. Kennedy was running for state treasurer. They thought all along that he was a United States senator from Massachusetts. Why would he want to take on another job that paid less and would keep him away from Washington?

But, what the hell, he was a Kennedy who could do no wrong in Massachusetts, so they voted for him, and that's how John Francis Kennedy, the foreman in a razor blade factory, was elected state treasurer.

The strength of his name was such that he was reelected three times, survived a challenge by John M. Kennedy, and was even mentioned prominently for governor in 1960.

It's things like that that concern Tim Cahill, the Norfolk County treasurer, as he campaigns for the Democratic nomination for state treasurer against three others, including one Michael Cahill.

"It would be more advantageous for me to be the only Cahill in the race," said Tim, in masterful understatement. Besides, M. Cahill would precede T. Cahill on the alphabetical ballot.

That's why a Tim Cahill supporter filed a challenge to Mike Cahill's qualifying signatures.

"I thought that Michael Cahill got in a little late and took advantage of the name," said Grace Carr.

Cashing in on a name is an old and honored ploy in Massachusetts politics. For all I know, there was an Irving Bradford on the same ballot when William Bradford was elected governor of Plymouth colony.

We saw it happen on the South Shore not too long ago when Brian Donnelly ran successfully for the congressional seat held for so long by the retiring Jimmy Burke.

Brian's chief opponent in the primary was Pat McDonough, a Boston city councilman. It wasn't long before the name of Joe McDonough, an obscure lawyer, joined them magically on the ballot.

When you asked Brian how come, he used to smile knowingly and change the subject.

I know it will come as a shock to most of you, but no less a figure than John F. Kennedy (John Fitzgerald, not John Francis) used the trick himself while winning his first term in Congress.

There were nine Democrats in that primary race in 1948, including Michael Neville, the mayor of Cambridge, and Joseph Russo, a Boston city councilman, who were Kennedy's main challengers.

Strictly by coincidence, of course, the ninth candidate was also named Joe Russo, who trained for Congress as a janitor and was "talked" into running by Joe Kane, a Kennedy cousin.

"They gave me favors," said Joe the Janitor. "Whatever I wanted. I could have gone in the housing project if I wanted. If I wanted an apartment, I could have got the favor. You know?"

He and his votes really weren't needed. Joe the Councilman got 5,661 votes. Joe the Janitor got 999. The future President Kennedy won handily with 22,183.

But no one ever accused Jack Kennedy of leaving a loose end around untended.

Senate boosts taxes, but won't cut waste

HEDLUND REPORT

ROBERT HEDLUND

In a budget session marked by the absence of any substantive debate, the Senate refused to consider any alternative to the $1.4 billion tax package that was passed as part of the Fiscal Year 2003 budget. This package, which may be the largest in the Commonwealth's history, included a retroactive hike to the tax rate on capital gains, a 25 percent reduction in personal exemptions, a future hike in the voter approved income tax rate to 5.3 percent, an immediate increase in taxes on all tobacco products, and an elimination of the voter approved charitable deduction. By refusing to consider any alternative, the Senate ultimately passed the burden for years of wasteful spending onto the hardworking taxpayers of Massachusetts.

Over the three-day long debate on the FY 2003 budget, I continuously fought to eliminate tax increases. Specifically, I offered the following:

〈 An amendment to eliminate the increase on Capital Gains

• An amendment to eliminate the retroactivity of the increase on Capital Gains

• An amendment to reinstate the voter approved charitable deduction

• An amendment to eliminate the cut in Personal Exemptions

• An amendment to maintain the voter approved Income Tax Rollback as well as Charitable Deduction and eliminate the cut in Personal Exemptions

For the last eight years, I have been the leading proponent in the Senate to return the Income Tax rate to 5.0 percent — this has not changed. I also offered or supported a number of initiatives and amendments that would have significantly cut spending. Unfortunately for the taxpayers of Massachusetts, the Senate's leadership decided in a closed-door caucus that there would be nothing, but cosmetic changes to their budget recommendations. On the floor, most Senators followed leadership's instructions and voted against all of the above amendments.

Watching the Senate push through this tax hike, I was in complete amazement of the lack of compassion on behalf of my fellow Senators. While many working families are feeling the negative effects of our current economic downturn, the Senate decided it is going to take more money out of their pockets. Because the Senate has refused to curtail its addiction to bloated and waste filled budgets, it will once again pass the problem along to the working families of the Commonwealth. For many Senators, the revenue generated by raising taxes is just another set of budget numbers; however, I am keenly aware of the real life impact these increased taxes will have on Massachusetts families.

By refusing to consider any alternative, the Senate ultimately passed the burden for years of wasteful spending onto the hardworking taxpayers of Massachusetts.

During this budget debate, the Senate leadership said time and time again that they had no choice but to raise taxes; however, there were alternatives. An alternative revenue package that I put forward would have maintained the voter approved income tax rollback and charitable deduction, while eliminating the reduction in personal exemptions. This would have been offset by changing the lottery pay-out ratio and permitting the installation of 1,500 slot machines at each of the Commonwealth's four current racetracks. Combined, these items would have generated $615 million – similar to the amount generated by the above tax hikes. Sadly, a vast majority of Senators again took their cue from leadership, and refused to even consider any alternative to raising taxes.

As debate came to a close, I decided to ultimately cast my vote for passage of the final budget version as it included a number of items that I worked hard to secure, including: level funding of education monies; funding to the local Councils on Aging; restoration of funding for the Talking Information Center in Marshfield and our local D.A.R.E. programs; funding for the Tri-Town Development Corporation for continued work on the airbase reuse plan; and school building assistance funding for numerous school projects on the South Shore. The budget also contains implementation of a program I co-sponsored called "Community Choice Initiatives," which will enable seniors to receive home care for short-term rehabilitative services through Medicaid.

While the vote has been taken to pass the budget in the Senate, there are more steps along the way before the budget is ultimately signed by the Governor. First, the House and Senate will meet in Conference Committee to address and reconcile the differences between their budget recommendations. After both bodies agree to a final joint version, it goes to the Governor's desk. When it finally does reach her desk, Governor Swift has promised to veto most or all of the increases passed in the budget. I stand with her, and will vote to uphold her veto and strike these burdensome tax increases from the budget. While the House and Senate leadership are firm in their resolve to balance this budget on the backs of Massachusetts taxpayers, I will continue to fight to achieve the best solution to our current budget situation.

Bob Hedlund represents the Plymouth-Norfolk senatorial district that includes Cohasset.

Issues take a back seat

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

News analysis and recap of state government for the week ending June 21.

Is Mitt the issue, or is running the government the issue?

Romney himself raised the question as hearings proceeded last week into whether he has been a resident of Massachusetts for seven years, the constitutional requirement to run for governor in this state. Democrats have formally challenged the Republican's residency status before the Ballot Law Commission; the commission has the power to remove Romney from the ballot if it finds he didn't truly maintain residence here.

The hearings have constituted a huge distraction, and Democrats like it that way. They filed their challenge almost immediately after Romney put forward his first serious policy proposal of the campaign, an education approach seeking to hold school systems and teachers more accountable for performance and to limit bilingual education.

It should have been bigger news than it was, but the Democrats succeeded in their mission to take the public's focus off Romney's ideas and message of change — still not too well articulated — and on to the question of whether he's a truthful person. He gave them ammunition, not so much by living in Utah — John Adams and John Volpe and Bill Weld all lived out of state like Romney — but by dissembling about how he handled his residency for tax purposes.

The Democrats pounced, seeking to "mess up Romney's hair," as the saying goes at the Statehouse. Everybody on Beacon Hill is having fun postulating about the effect of the challenge on Romney's reputation.

In the meantime, the House and Senate began negotiating over differences in their budgets for next year, deciding the fate of the Clean Elections law and deciding which mix of major tax hikes are going to be imposed this year to limit the amount that must be cut from programs and services. This process began in the context of an announcement from the acting governor that revenues are off projections by yet another $540 million — and neither branch has proposed a plan to raises taxes, cut services or spend reserves to make up the difference.

Nor have any of the candidates, with the focus this week largely on a judicial proceeding few Democrats expect will be decided in their favor. But many Democrats expect it will do damage to Romney via journalistic seepage — the sort of fine mist of news we live in nowadays, not concentrating on a lot of details but still receiving the takeaway points — like, "Is Romney running legitimately? Democrats say no."

On Wednesday (June 19) Romney tried to redirect the information fog machine, proposing reforms to the management of the Big Dig and sale of the Hynes Convention Center as a way to begin addressing the project's cost. On Thursday (June 20), he came right to the Statehouse to talk to the press corps about the budget. Still, Democrats made enough noise about Romney's residency that another one of their gubernatorial candidates, Robert Reich, said last week that his party should knock it off and get serious about the issues again.

Whether you're a fan of politics or policy, there was some of both this week.

• Knowing that a proposed amendment to define marriage as between one man and one woman was likely to advance in Constitutional Convention, Senate President Thomas Birmingham recessed the House-Senate joint session without considering the measure. The tactic outraged opponents of gay marriage who've collected tens of thousands of signatures to move the question forward. The "ConCon" is next slated to meet July 17, with no assurance of any action on the amendment.

• The Office of Campaign and Political Finance last week ruled the anti-bilingual education campaign headed by California businessman Ron Unz did not violate finance laws against collecting money from out of state sources. The campaign can keep the $98,000 being questioned by bilingual supporters and will face no sanctions.

• After the Herald put the immortal headline "Bacon Hill" on E. Beardsley's story about earmarking in the environmental bond bill, the process of passing the already-delayed measure slowed way down. Members wanted to carve out their own slices of the $424 million in play, and some thought too many Finneran lieutenants were being favored. So after ordering the bill to a third reading, the House put off further action until Tuesday (June 25); amendments were due by noon Monday (june 24).

• Acting Gov. Swift named John Quelch, a professor at Harvard Business School, to chair the Massport board, ending the time-honored tradition of appointing people to head the board whose political credentials were more impressive than their aviation or harbor experience.

• A retired Newton lawyer is asking the state Board of Bar Overseers to consider disbarring House Speaker Thomas Finneran and 24 other representatives he says have violated their professional and legislative oaths in refusing to fund the state's Clean Elections Law. Jerome Medalie, a 50-year member of the bar, and a Clean Elections supporter, says by asking the board to consider action against the lawmakers, he is upholding his duty to report unethical behavior among fellow lawyers. "You can't tell the SJC to go to hell with impunity," he told the News Service. Finneran had no comment.

• Jeffrey Ryan of Reading Memorial High School was honored by state education officials for his energy, community involvement and ability to connect with his students, many of whom came to the State House to cheer as he received Teacher of the Year honors.

• The Massachusetts Turnpike Authority twice asked to delay a legislative hearing on alternatives to the scheduled turnpike and airport tunnel toll hikes, saying they needed more time to review authority finances and develop a plan. But not only did the board show up to the June 20 Transportation Committee hearing without a unified plan, they spend the majority of their time squabbling amongst each other. The performance drew the ire of committee chairmen Sen. Robert Havern (D-Arlington) and Rep. Joseph Sullivan (D-Braintree), with Havern saying the board has a month to pull its act together or face possible legislative repercussions. The board then met at its downtown headquarters and reached an initial agreement that would give Fast Lane users a 50 percent rebate on money spent on the toll hikes.

POLITICAL NOTES

Murray honorary chair of Palmer's rep. campaign

Mary Jeanette Murray, who served as state representative for the towns of Hingham, Hull, Cohasset and Scituate, joins the Committee to Elect Nathaniel Palmer as the campaign's Honorary Chairman. Palmer is running for the seat she vacated last January, following her decision not to seek another term. Murray served in the legislature across three decades, and today remains one of the most respected figures in Massachusetts politics.

"We are proud and honored to have Mary Jeanette Murray join our campaign," says Palmer. "Our campaign is foremost about community advocacy, and no one has been a stronger voice for our community than Mary Jeanette."

Throughout her career as the district's state representative, Murray was well known for her support and assistance to the communities she served. She was also a vocal and active legislator on Beacon Hill, sponsoring several bills focused on issues such as restoring local control on education and development.

"While in the legislature Mary Jeanette served as a tireless advocate for the issues central to our campaign, such as the need for cities and towns to control local zoning and planning, and protecting the rights of small business owners," says Palmer. "Mary Jeanette presented an unbroken continuity of representation across her three decades in the Statehouse. My hope is to restore that continuity by bringing a new perspective to Beacon Hill, serving as the point of balance that Mary Jeanette had faithfully provided for so long."

Murray will work with Palmer throughout the towns of Hingham, Hull, Cohasset and Scituate, lending her broad base of experience in those communities, helping to reinforce the campaign's fight to restore balance within the State house and strengthen representation for the South Shore

Koch to run for county treasurer

Thomas P. Koch of Quincy, a Democrat, recently announced his candidacy for Norfolk County Treasurer before a crowd of 400 supporters.

In making his announcement, Koch cited his 10 years of service as a member of the Norfolk County Financial Advisory Board. During his time on the Financial Advisory Board, Norfolk County was recognized as one of the best managed counties in the state.

Norfolk County, which provides services to its 28 cities and towns, has a budget of approximately $24 million. The County owns and manages the Superior Courthouse and several district courthouses throughout the County. It owns and operates the President's Golf Course and the Norfolk County Agricultural School, as well as the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds. Its Engineering Department provides engineering services to the cities and town in the County.

As Treasurer, Koch would serve as the Chairman of the Retirement Board, which has assets of approximately $390 million. The source of those funds includes deductions from the pay of employees of the various towns and payments from the towns themselves.

Koch began a career in government when he was appointed in 1988 to serve as the Director of the Council on Aging for the City of Quincy. He held that position for two years, and in 1990 was appointed Executive Secretary to the Mayor. During his nearly five years as Executive Secretary, he was responsible for the implementation of mayoral initiatives, executive oversight of the $120 million municipal budget, and daily management of the City's twenty-two department heads. In 1995, Koch was appointed the Executive Director of the Park, Forestry and Cemetery Departments for the City of Quincy, responsible for the management of 43 employees.

Down on the boardwalk

Ramp built at Sandy Beach

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

There are two new additions to Sandy Beach this summer, thanks to a carpentry class at South Shore Regional Vocational Technical High School in Hanover.

The regional high school, dubbed South Shore Vo-Tech for short, offers training in an array of trades and partnered with the Sandy Beach Association to replace a handicapped-accessible ramp and lifeguard stand.

Vo-Tech teacher Derek Mariani said his students reproduced what was originally at the site but did so with more environmentally friendly materials. The pressure-treated wood used for the walkway contains no arsenic, a potentially harmful chemical.

The students, who scouted the beach and took photographs earlier in the year, have been working on the project for a few months as part of their carpentry class. They took the pictures and the measurements back to their shop at the high school and built the pieces they needed.

The ramp contains close to 100 wooden boards.

"This really teaches the kids some responsibility," Mariani said. "We leave the school every day at about 8 a.m. and put in a full day of work. That's how it's going to be for them when they graduate."

PHOTOS/EVAN SCHIFF

Vo-Tech teacher Derek Mariani supervises as students Courtney Citrano and Pat McBrine, both from Rockland, put the final touches on the boardwalk at Sandy Beach.

Patricia Murphy, a trustee of the Sandy Beach Association that manages the beach, gave Vo-Tech high marks for the project. The association provided the materials and Vo-Tech supplied labor and installation for free.

"They were wonderful," she said.

Murphy explained the old ramp and lifeguard stand were built by the shop class at Cohasset High School but shop is no longer offered at CHS.

This is Mariani's fifth year at Vo-Tech. His class also built a two-story garage and a porch deck for the Whitman Counsel of Aging this year.

"The toughest thing for the kids is realizing how long the day is and staying organized throughout the process," Mariani said. "They have to focus on one project for a significant period of time and that can be difficult."

Julie Dobson, the beach manager at Sandy Beach, is grateful the students were able to make the beach both more attractive and accessible. She said all her lifeguards would really appreciate the new lifeguard chair.

"The old one was getting pretty beat up," she said. "When they start to wear down like that they can get dangerous, we didn't want anyone falling off."

Laura Kondrat, a lifeguard at the beach, was busy helping the students paint the chair. She said the walkway and the stand are something the beach needed.

"This new stand already looks a lot better than the old one," Kondrat said.

Vo-Tech draws from eight towns on the South Shore including Abington, Hanover, Hanson, Norwell, Rockland, Scituate, Whitman and Cohasset. Whitman and Rockland routinely supply the most students and Cohasset usually sends the least.

Vo-Tech offers 14 specialty areas including auto bodywork, automotive work, carpentry, cosmetology, culinary arts, drafting, electronics, graphic arts, health careers, heating and air conditioning, industrial electronics, industrial technology machine shop, and metal fabrication.

The students are immersed in their specialty area. Over the four years, they will spend 1,500 hours in a shop along with their regular studies. The school has a working auto body shop, restaurant, beauty salon and welding shop to name a few of the working classrooms.

Long term fix

Former Thayer and Blue Hills assistant hired as new C.H.S. hockey coach

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Ron Ford expressed the hope when he started his search for a successor to Dennis Walsh as hockey coach that he'd find someone who could "grow with the program long term."

Well, the Cohasset High Athletic Director thinks he's struck gold in 28-year old John Blake, a highly recommended former assistant coach at the Thayer Academy and Blue Hills Regional hockey factories.

"We're extremely excited to have someone like John coming aboard," said the third year AD. "We had a pretty extensive search, with some excellent candidates, but John really stood out. He's energetic, enthusiastic and comes from a really strong background. We like the fact he can give a long term commitment to the program. To be honest, we just liked everything about him."

It appears the feeling is mutual.

To take this job, Blake leaves his position on the staff of Blue Hills, the team that won the state sectional championship this past winter. He claimed, quite frankly, that he wouldn't have left that post for too many head coaching jobs. So, obviously, something about the Cohasset High job appealed strongly to him.

"I think from what I've seen of Cohasset they can be a top 10 Div. 3 team (in the state) next year," said Blake, who actually scouted the Skippers last year when Blue Hills was one round away from meeting them in the state tourney. "They're a good skating team and they have some good skill players. I'm looking forward to working with them"

After going 19-0-1 in the 2001-'02 regular season, the Skippers received the number one seed in the south section of the Div. 3 state tourney, but won only one game in the post-season before falling to Bourne, the team Blue Hills beat in the south sectional championship game.

Blake feels that disappointing end for Cohasset may well have been the result of the team's weak league and non-league schedules. Not surprisingly, he plans to fill out as much of the non-league portion of this year's schedule with as many perennial powers as possible. Bourne and Blue Hills are two of new dates he's already added to the slate.

"That 19-0-1 record might have been a little deceiving last year," noted Blake. "The way I see it, a tougher non-league schedule might have helped Cohasset come tourney time last year, and I think it will help this year too."

He notes that he likes the speed and quickness of what remains of the Cohasset team – not surprising considering the return of forwards such as Matt Davis, Tom Anderson, John Durkin and Rob Carpenter — which should play well in to his preference for an aggressive offen-

Cohasset laxmen lead BSG team

Four Cohasset High lacrosse standouts, and a pair of local coaches, will lead the 2002 Southeast squad in this summer's boys' scholastic division of the Bay State Games.

After three days of tryouts on Milliken Field, Cohasset coaches Terry Kahn and Kevin Orcutt – aided by Emerson College head coach Stu Curran, Medfield Hing coach Bob Aronson and Weymouth High coach John Daley – selected a team of 24 public and private school players to defend the gold medal the Southeast won a year ago.

Fifty-eight players participated in the tryouts, including nine from Cohasset – the largest number of any town.

"We want to thank Town Manager Mark Haddad, recreation director Jack Worley, and athletic director Ron Ford for working together to allow Cohasset Lacrosse and its coaches to once again host the regional team," said coach Terry Kahn. "This is a critically important program for the sport in our town, because it lets a large number of our players participate both in the tryouts and the Games. The exposure helps all of our players, and we deeply appreciate the town's support."

Four Cohasset juniors – Nick Spirito, Curt Kahn, Matt Davis and Robert Hickey – were named to the team. For defenseman Spirito and attackman Kahn, it was the second year they've been so honored. Davis and Hickey, both midfielders, will be making their first appearance. All four are co-captains of the 2003 Skipper squad.

"Four is the maximum allowed from any one school," noted coach Kevin Orcutt, "but had that not been the case, we probably could have added one or two more Cohasset players, based on their

Post 118 coach not discouraged as winless streak reaches three games

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

You'd think a coach coming off a three game winless streak would be at least somewhat discouraged.

If you jumped to this conclusion about Cohasset Post 118 baseball coach Scott Arnold, however, you would be dead wrong.

With several of his top players out of town, Arnold's Cohasset and Scituate charges fell twice this week by a total of two runs to the perceived powers of District 6, Quincy and Braintree, and sandwiched this around a tie with Stoughton that ended on a controversial ruling by umpires.

"I haven't seen anything so far that makes me believe we can't beat any team in this league," said the eighth year head coach, whose team fell to 3-2-1 with these setbacks. "The way I look at it, if we have our full lineup for these games, we're probably 6-0 right now."

Gone from the lineup right now is starting centerfielder and leadoff hitter Greg Levin (on family vacation in Australia), as well as starting left

Whoops! Post 118 shortstop tries to corral bad hop in Sunday's showdown with District 6 rival Stoughton at Scituate High. The game ended in a 6-6 tie, dropping the Cohasset-Scituate team's record on the season to 3-2-1.

Cohasset's Buckley named among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process was not an easy one.

Several of the young women you see listed here as "Honorable Mentions" received serous consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

After consulting with area coaches, however, we feel secure that we chose the top 14 female athletes and two relay teams in Marinerland for this honor.

Jenn Buckley- Sophomore (Capt.)
Mile/Javelin - Cohasset

Jenn Buckley

This sophomore was one of the Lady Skippers unquestioned team leaders, as well as their most accomplished and versatile athlete…in fact, coach Al LaFontain noted her off-track leadership was as important to the team as her on-track heroics…regularly took two or three first places in South Shore League dual meet action to lead the Lady Skippers to their first plus-.500 season in several years on the track…often ran both the 1-mile and 2-mile race for the Lady Skippers at dual meets…was named to her second consecutive South Shore League all-star team this spring…qualified for states in the mile, javelin and as a member of the 4x400 relay team…finished a very respectable seventh at the state Class D meet in the mile with a time of 5:28.08…her career best in the mile is 5:27…career best in javelin is 98-feet-7-inches… took 17th at the class meet in the javelin (91'02")…also a standout soccer and basketball player at Cohasset High... Cohasset track coach Al LaFontain: "Jenn is just a great athlete, leader and team member. You didn't have to tell her to do things She just did them. She'd grab someone before a race to get them ready and she really kept the team together."

Ashley Hubbard - Sophomore
200 meters/LJ - Marshfield

Ashley Hubbard

While her Marshfield team (1-7) had trouble adjusting to competition in the Old Colony League, Hubbard certainly did not…The sophomore sprinter was the OCL All-League Meet champion in both the 200 meters and long jump…She went unbeaten in-league in both events this season…Hubbard then took her 200-meter talents all the way to the New England Championships this year, where she finished 14th (26.6)…A week prior, Hubbard recorded a second-place finish in the 200 at the All-State Championships, running a personal best time of 25.06, which was one of the fastest times in the state…At this year's State Class B Meet, Hubbard took second in both the 200 (26.2) and long jump (16'10")…The sophomore set a new MHS record in the long jump with 17' 5 3/4"…Hubbard was the anchor of last year's record-setting 4x100-meter relay team, which finished fourth at 2001 New England Championships and earned her a spot on last year's Mariner All-Scholastic team…Hubbard competes indoors for Marshfield during the winter season and plays field hockey for MHS in the fall…She will be among the top returnees for the Lady Rams next season. Marshfield coach Larry Nangle: "Ashley works very hard, listens, and tries new things. It's only her third season competing in track and she can only get better. She has tremendous athletic ability."

Marshfield coach Larry Nangle: "She was our top middle distance runner but she had trouble with a leg injury. It still bothered her outdoors, so she was not at 100 percent. Still, she managed to be our top high jumper this season and ran a leg on the relay. She likes the high jump and wants to work at it more. She too can only get better."

Rockland coach Peter Woodward: "Nicole is the epitome of a gutsy distance runner. She loves to win. She was a captain as a junior, which I very rarely do, but she had all the qualities you'd expect from a captain. She's a great leader and is a hard worker at practice."

Nicole Christoforo

Laura Kemp - Freshman
Hurdles - Rockland

Laura Kemp

Although just a freshman, Kemp is already making an impact in the Patriot League…In a shift from the 800 meters last season, Kemp's consistent performances in the 100 and 300- meter hurdling events helped the Lady Bulldogs win their second-straight Patriot League title…Kemp took third in the 300-meter hurdles at this year's All-League Meet and also ran a leg on the winning 4x400-meter relay team…In addition to competing in both hurdling events, Kemp was also a top high jumper on the team, clearing 5-feet, and was often a triple winner in dual meets…Also got up to 31-feet in the triple jump this season…Kemp owned the PL's best 300-meter hurdle time of 52.1…The freshman competed in the State Class C Meet…Kemp is making her second appearance on a Mariner All-Scholastic squad as she was also named to our cross country team last fall…Kemp still has a long running career ahead of her at RHS. Rockland coach Peter Woodward: "Laura is one of the most coordinated athletes I've ever coached. She made a difficult jump to the hurdles this season and was excellent at both. She's built like an ideal track girl. She's a wonderful kid."

Hingham coach Livvy Kates: "She's a very hard working individual. Even when she was injured she would come find me everyday to keep me posted. It was very frustrating for her not to be able to run but she demonstrated a great deal of patience. She was able to hold on and really come through in the end."

Kayla Halloran- Senior
Mile - Norwell

Kayla Halloran

Has now been named to three consecutive Mariner All-Scholastic track teams…suffered through a series of illnesses and injuries through much of her junior and senior years, and never seemed to completely regain the form of her sensational sophomore year, but still enjoyed an excellent senior spring campaign, capping it off with a third place finish at the state Class D meet with her best time of the season (5:17.23)…ran her career best outdoor mile of 5:10 as a sophomore… ran a 5:11.4 to win last spring's Class D mile…finished eighth in the mile at the All-State meet, two spots shy of qualifying for the New England track and field championship…went a perfect 7-0 running the mile in South Shore League dual meet competition this season, helping to lead the Lady Clippers to their second straight SSL title…also won six of seven 800-meter races this season… was part of the 4x400 relay team that finished sixth at the Class D meet and was also named to the Mariner All-Scholastic team… finished second in the 800 at the Weston Twilight Classic this spring with a run 2:22…finished fifth in the indoor 1,600-meter race as a sophomore at the New England's with a career best 5:08…also ran her career best 11:39 in the 2-mile during her sophomore year…will run track and major in Biology at Bucknell…Norwell coach Coach Chuck Martin: "Kayla is just an exceptionally dedicated runner. Her big thing is her consistency, though. She hardly ever had a bad meet or performance."

Hannah Rapalee- Freshman
800 meters - Silver Lake

Hannah Rapalee

Talk about a bright future, you can't have a much better freshman year than this young lady had…was the only member of her team to advance to the New England track and field championships this spring, and finished a very respectable eighth in the 800-meter race field dominated by cream of the crop upperclassmen…advanced to the New England's by shaving two seconds off her personal best in the 800 with a 2:17.40 to finish fifth at the All-State meet, also shattering the 21-year old SL record (2:18.04)…this was a week after she finished second at the state Class A meet (2:19.65)…undefeated in Old Colony League dual meet competition in the 800 this spring…OCL all-star…also had one of the fastest outdoor miles ever run by an SL freshman (5:26), and coach Joe Darche figures she'll make a run at that school record (5:05) as well before it's all said and done…was also a member of the 4x100 relay team that missed by just .02 seconds of qualifying for New England's…was a top 600-meter (top time of 1:39.4) and 300-meter racer for Lady Lakers this winter, earning OCL all-star honors here as well…also a standout soccer player who made the SL varsity starting lineup as a freshman, and plays year round as a member of the South Shore Select club team…Silver Lake coach Joe Darche: "Keep in mind she's just a freshman, and has a lot of running ahead of her. She's very focussed for her age, so it really looks like she has a bright future…Once she concentrates on the mile, she'll probably own that (school) mark as well. Every time she ran the mile, she knew she was also scheduled to run another event, so she never really cut loose."

fielder and cleanup hitter Tim Straughn and two other regulars in the outfield rotation, Eric Demahowski and Chris Carr. The latter three players are in Kentucky until Monday working with the Apalachia Project.

In both the 3-2 loss to Quincy on Friday and 2-1 loss to Braintree on Monday, the lack of defensive experience in the outfield wound up biting the Post 118 team. In each game, the winning run was put on base because of an outfield misplay.

"I'm not blaming the kids who were out there, because they weren't really used to playing out there," said Arnold. "But more experienced outfielders probably make those plays."

Monday's loss to Braintree, which features several of the players from the Braintree High team that just lost in the Div. 1 Eastern Mass championship game to St. Johns, squandered what Arnold termed a "great, great effort" from starting pitcher Tom Fitzgerald.

The recent B.C. High grad surrendered just three hits and struck out eight while going the distance on the mound. One of those hits was a blooper off the bat of Braintree third baseman Jimmy Pierce to open the bottom of the seventh that was misplayed in to a hit.

Just moments after Cohasset centerfielder Ted Straughn (Tim's freshman brother) gunned out what would have been the winning run at home, Pierce raced home on a passed ball.

"It's a tough way to lose a game, but against a team like Braintree, every mistake could be huge, and that was the case here," noted Arnold.

Braintree's Ken Downey matched Fitzgerald virtually pitch-for-pitch, also striking out eight while surrendering just three hits.

Braintree broke the scoring ice early, as designated hitter Nick Angelini doubled home Pierce in the first to make it 1-0.

Post 118 finally got on the board in the sixth when third baseman Mike Gulinello worked a walk to lead things off, stole second and then moved to third on a nice piece of hitting by Straughn. The Cohasset High freshman put a tough pitch on the ground to the right side to advance Gulinello, who would then score on a wild pitch.

Post 118 pitcher Jesse Cole brings the heat in Sunday's showdown with District 6 rival Stoughton.

The baseball rarity, a tie, came on Sunday when umpires would not allow Stoughton and host Scituate to start a ninth inning after 7:50 p.m. and the score tied at 6-6.

"We probably had another 45 minutes of daylight, and I had the top of my order coming up," bemoaned Arnold. "I couldn't believe they call it when they did."

Still, in the grand scheme of things, the veteran coach sees this as but a minor speed bump. Five of eight teams in District 6 will qualify for the post-season, and Arnold sounds convinced his team will be one of those, and get back in to the playoffs after a one year absence.

"I really believe we can beat anyone," appraised Arnold. "The kids still need to come together and play the way they're capable of playing and get the 10 or so wins we need. If they can't do that, they don't deserve to be in the playoffs."

sive attack.

"I don't like to have my teams lay back and wait for their offensive opportunities," offered Blake, who has already met with team captains.

Other than that, Blake appears to enter the job with a pretty open mind. He says he intends to let what he sees in practice determine to a large degree what type of game plan he'll adopt.

In general, though, Blake says he aspires to put a "smart, well conditioned and disciplined team" on the ice.

"I want hard working, disciplined and motivated student athletes," said Blake, "and I stress 'student-athlete'. If the players aren't going to do it in the classroom, they're not going to play hockey. That's where it all starts for me. I want kids who are going to represent their school and town in the right way."

Blake, 28, starred for Canton High in hockey, graduating in 1992. He then moved on to Plymouth State in New Hampshire to play hockey and major in Education. He gave up on hockey after his sophomore year to concentrate more fully on academics and graduated in 1996 with a degree in Education. He has just recently earned his Master's Degree in Education from Cambridge College.

He was hired in the fall of 1996 as a Phys Ed and Health Teacher at the Duxbury Middle School. He has also been Duxbury High's freshman boys soccer coach the last few years, and this past school year took on the additional job as Spring Faculty Manager at D.H.S. – becoming, in essence, an assistant Athletic Director.

Hockey remains Blake's first athletic love, though. He worked his first two years out of college as an assistant at Thayer before moving on to Blue Hills in 1998, learning at the feet of two of the most celebrated coaches in Massachusetts school boy circles: Jack Foley at Thayer and Steve Woods at Blue Hills. Those coaches helped instill in him many qualities essential to the success of a head coach, not the least of which appears to be confidence.

"I've learned from some great guys and great coaches, but when you're an assistant there are always things you'd like to try your own way," he said. "Now it looks like I'll get that chance to implement a few of my own ideas. I'm looking forward to the challenge."

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Just killing time here talking a little baseball until my Red Sox minor league contract comes in.

Hey, if John Henry Williams rates one, why not yours truly, the nephew of a longtime season ticket holder? The Kid's kid might have more favorable baseball bloodline and a coupla years on me, but I can be real scrappy.

Speaking of which, if the Sox send "scrappy" Lou Merloni back to Pawtucket in favor of keeping Jose Offerman on the active roster, I'll be boycotting the All-Star game. Mr. "Awfulman" is older, slower, a far less flexible and effective defensive player than Framingham's Merloni, and he's hitting 60 points lower than him to boot. Other than that, he's a hell of an addition to the team. It seems twisted to think the only thing Jose has going for him over Merloni is that multi-million-dollar rotten egg the Sox front office doesn't want to eat. The way I look at it is that unpleasant morsel is being consumed anyway, and it seems it would be a lot more palatable going down in one big gulp rather than one small bite at a time. In other words, if Jose stinks as a ballplayer like a rotten egg and he's not helping the team, why wait to get rid of him? He's gone after this season anyway. Hold your nose and swallow hard, I say.

Speaking of talk of an All-Star game boycott by the players, with all of the money the Major League Players Union pulls in, there's no excuse for there not being a professionally trained team of dope slappers. John Burkett certainly deserved to have his bell rung last week when he made the comment about boycotting the All-Star game.

In lieu of the dope slappers, you'd think Donald Fehr would at least send out instructions to all union members spelling out their only real two responsibilities for maximizing their earning potential: 1) be the best baseball player you can be, 2) don't do anything that's going to further antagonize the fan base. Not too complicated, I'd say. With an eight-figure salary as incentive, I could probably follow that directive pretty easily.

Call me naïve, but I say the next shut down of Major League Baseball is the one that finally does irreparable harm to the industry. The fans have reached their tolerance saturation point, something that has more than a little to do with the events of Sept. 11 and the resultant way in which all of our perceptions have been forever altered. More than ever before, we realize baseball is just a game. If the billionaires and multi-millionaires can't find a way to work things out, screw 'em. I'll take my kids to a New England Revolution, Boston Breakers or Boston Cannons game in the summer, or perhaps a Cape Cod League or Legion baseball game, and I'm guessing there are an awful lot of like-minded people out there. A lot of younger folks are tiring of large ticket baseball anyway. My guess is it won't take much of a nudge to start pushing 'em away in droves for good.

There are four or five franchises that simply won't survive a work stoppage, and even traditional seemingly Teflon-clad teams such as the Red Sox and Braves will feel this one.

Wish I could say the same for the Yanks, but with that local TV contract in place, a work stoppage would probably only help create an even greater imbalance.

And speaking of that, here's hoping the small market owners stick to their guns regarding a truly significant luxury tax. I'm guessing many more players out there than the Union would like to admit are willing to bend on this front. Sure, there are those players who will profess the party line about how un-American it is to interfere with wanton profiteering until their dying breath (or at least until the repo men come looking for their "back up" Ferrari), but common sense tells me there must be a healthy majority out there who see the eminent wisdom of the hard luxury tax. Certainly, if things continue as they are for the Yankees, it won't be long before the eight to 10 teams that are now playing the role of slightly glorified Washington Generals increases in to the twenties.

Closer to home

Congratulations to two Marinerland products who became first round NHL draft picks on Saturday.

Ryan Whitney, the Scituate native and Thayer Academy grad, was taken fifth overall by the Pittsburgh Penguins. The 6-foot-3, 200 pound defenseman may well return for his sophomore year at Boston University next winter, but he remains property of the Penguins.

Mike Morris, of Braintree and St. Sebastian's Academy, is scheduled to begin his freshman year at Northeastern this fall on a hockey scholarship, but the San Jose Sharks surprised a few NHL scouts by making the 6-foot-1, 185 pound winger their first selection with the 27th overall pick.

Well wishes also go out to Pembroke's Peter Metcalf, the recent University of Maine graduate who the Bruins signed as a free agent to a two-year contract a few weeks back.

Metcalf, a defenseman, played high school hockey at Cushing Academy and moved on to play four years for the University Maine, graduating this spring.

"Peter is an offensive defenseman who plays with some bite," said Bruins General Manager Mike O'Connell. "We feel he's an excellent prospect for this organization."

Metcalf, 23, finished second on the Black Bears in scoring this winter with 9 goals and 41 assists in 44 games. He also lead the team in penalty minutes (66) and +/- (+29), and was third in the team in shots on goal (115). The 6-foot, 200-pound bluliner is the son of Judy and Peter Metcalf. His sister Erin played defense for Northeastern University's nationally ranked women's team (1996–00). He was a business major.

Metcalf was originally drafted by the Toronto Maple Leafs.

Kudos likewise to former Norwell High baseball star Mark Woodworth. The 1990 NHS grad was named this week as head coach at Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn. He was actually named as interim head coach prior to this season after the retirement of the school's long-time coach, but school administrators elected to drop the "interim" label this week.

Mark played Little League baseball in Norwell as well. The Woodworth Field in Norwell (across from Jacobs Pond) is named in honor of his father, Al Woodworth, a long-time Little League coach and official who died in 1984.

First annual family lax day a great success

This past Sunday, Cohasset Youth Lacrosse celebrated the end of another fantastic season with their inaugural Family Lax Day which featured "grudge matches" between the "White" and "Blue" teams at the U10, U12, and U14 levels of the boys program to determine who got the town bragging rights for the coming year. The Lacrosse Boosters also sponsored a fantastic BBQ and picnic for over 125 families that are involved in the Youth program with a buffet that included the normal grilled fare along with "chowdah" from The Red Lion, sausages with peppers and onions (a crowd favorite), and desserts that were donated by the families of the players. In addition, we also had a surprise visit from the Boston Cannons who came to Cohasset to help support our program and to give the boys some "tips from the pros" on lacrosse, teamwork, and the benefits of a positive attitude.

Throughout the day we had over 200 people participate to cheer on their favorite players and with Mother Nature throwing in some late afternoon sunshine to add to the festivities, it turned out to be a great Fathers Day for everyone in attendance. In addition, through generous donations received during the day, the Boosters will also be able to shore up their support for next year's new Boys and Girls Junior Varsity programs that will be launched at the High School. It was full day of fun for everyone and for those that were keeping track (and the kids certainly were), the "White" teams swept the competition in closely contested games at each age level to earn the distinction of Family Lax Day Champions (you will probably see them wearing their winning t-shirts around town.

In addition to the Boosters who sponsored the event, we would also like to thank the following businesses for their support in making it a special day: Adrian Morris Salons, The Village Butcher, The Red Lion Inn, The Boston Cannons, Shaws, Cohasset Soccer and Little League, South Shore Embroidery, The Good Sport, and Commonwealth Lacrosse. We would also like to acknowledge all of the volunteers that staffed the event and in particular, the volunteer committee of Millie Oswald, Sarah Murphy, Patty Connors, and Maria Mills; without whose tireless efforts, the day would never have come together as the great event it turned out to be.

Lastly, the Boosters would like to extend their appreciation and gratitude to all of the parents and players within the youth program for making it another successful year for the players, the coaches, and the Town of Cohasset. Based on the level of support that you continue to provide to our program, it is clear that lacrosse is alive and well and will continue to offer our kids a great athletic, personal, and recreational experience for many years to come.

We hope everyone has a great summer and don't forget to pick up your new t-shirts for the beach .

So close and yet...

U12 girls soccer team falls in semis after historic run, great experiences

Disregarding the ninety-degree temperatures, Cohasset took the field at the Massachusetts Tournament of Champions to face the best soccer teams in the state. Confident in their ability, trusting in their teammates, the CYSL Girls U12 League Champions turned a blind eye to the tournament's overwhelming atmosphere and set quickly to work.

Around them teams from all over the state, all champions representing their respective leagues, were scattered across 21 fields in their pursuit of a State Championship. For two days these fields would host games on the hour, as teams competed within their brackets to achieve the best record and a chance to proceed to Sunday, the final four in each division.

Cohasset proved well suited to the challenge. The opening game Friday morning against Shrewsbury saw strong attack play by Meg Anderson, Sammy Fortin, Gabriella Flibotte and Gina Guiggio that kept the opponents on their heels. Sarah Coggins, Tory Hart and Maggie McGoldrick owned the middle of the field, controlling the mid play and supporting the attack. Defensive standouts Ellie Casey, Sammie Lehr, Caitlin Mahoney and Anna Hagerty turned back each attempt to goal. With goals by Maggie McGoldrick and Gabriella Flibotte, Cohasset defeated Shrewsbury 2-1 to open the tourney on the right foot.

Second up was a strong team from Fall River. Skilled and blessed with fantastic speed, Fall River tested the Cohasset team, dominating play with sharp passing and footwork. Adjusting to the strong ball control skills, Cohasset midfielders concentrated on turning the momentum. While Sally Meehan, Alicia Asnault , Rachel McMorris, and Kristin Monaco fought to bring pressure into the offensive zone, McKenna Teague was single handedly shutting down Fall Rivers' most productive attacker.

With less than a minute to play, Cohasset's final attack started with a booming kick from the foot of goalie Johanna Brophy. Down the field roared the Cohasset attack with Gabriella Flibotte racing towards the goal. Unstoppable, Gabriella netted the tying goal with less than thirty seconds left in the game. Deflated, Fall River had to settle for a tie while Cohasset celebrated a come-from-behind effort that kept them atop the standings.

Refreshed from a good night's sleep, Cohasset returned to the field to face Burlington, a big team looking for its first tournament win. The teams locked horns from the start with both exhibiting strong skills and clean aggressive play. But, as in so many past games, different players stepped up and made the plays for Cohasset. Late in the first half, Meg Anderson collected a perfect pass from midfield and sprinted towards the goal, netting the only score of the game. Cohasset remained unbeaten within the bracket, assuring themselves a spot in the final four.

Not since the 1986 boys high school team coached by Larry Shultz had a Cohasset team made it to the semifinal round at the state level. More than 600 teams from across the state started the season early in the spring and now only four remained. Cohasset was among the best of the best.

The draw pitted Cohasset against a tough Abington team comprised totally of solid players with club experience. Cohasset mounted an early attack that put the Abington girls back on their heels. Abington responded with counterattacks of their own as both teams vigorously intensified their offensive pressure. Ellie Casey was relentless as she tracked down and stopped each opposing striker.

In goal for Cohasset, Johanna Brophy was immense, stopping bombs launched from every direction. Midway through the first half Cohasset struck. Stopping another Abington drive, Johanna Brophy booted the ball far down the field. Sarah Coggins controlled the kick and placed a perfect pass up field to Gabriella Flibotte who beat the Abington goalie at the far post to take the lead into the second half 1-0.

The Abington team came out of halftime with a ferocious attack that proved too much for Cohasset to handle and which ultimately provided two goals.

Abington successfully ended a phenomenal tournament run by our Cohasset team. Immediately following the last whistle, our ladies, on their own initiative, gave Abington a congratulatory cheer and wished them luck in the finals, which Abington won 3-0 against Fall River.

After the game, both players and parents realized that something really special had happened in Amherst. Due to the girls' hard work and love of the game, families took three days off from daily routines to share in the great accomplishments of this team. New friendships were built between families as they enjoyed each other's company away from the household chores and cell phones. This event helped bring out much of what is best about youth sports.

Every member of the team worked hard, played brilliantly, and contributed to the team success. More importantly, these young athletes have an experience that they will remember forever. Few make the Tournament of Champions and fewer still make the Final Four. Our girls should take great pride in what they achieved. The ambassadors from Cohasset represented our town with great passion, sportsmanship, and fair play. Congratulations girls, we are proud of you.

outstanding play over the three days."

Only one other school – Div 2 state champion Hingham – also had four players named to the team. Boston College High and Weymouth each have three squad members, while Medfield and Marshfield each have a pair. Milton HS, Milton Academy, Deerfield Academy, Braintree HS, Catholic Memorial and Scituate HS have one member apiece.

Players are eligible if they live or go to school in one of the towns that make up the Southeast region for the Games. Three Scituate-based players – Steve Williams (a former Norwell HS standout) of Deerfield, Ryan Flannery of BC High, and Jarret Dawson – made the squad, as did the first-ever Hull player, Garrett Curran of Catholic Memorial.

The team will have five local practices before the Games begin on Thursday, July 11 at Wentworth Institute in Boston. The Games conclude on Sunday, July 14 with bronze- and gold-medal games.

Cohasset lacrosse players received other recognition this week as well. Nick Spirito was selected to play the Eastern Massachusetts Underclassmen All-Star game, held last Saturday in Lowell. His teammate Curt Kahn was picked as an alternate for the game.

Petition supports Right to Know bill

Parishioners at St. Anthony Church will collect signatures after all Masses on June 29 to 30 on a petition in support of the Woman's Right to Know bill. The bill, sponsored by Mass. Citizens for Life, provides women with full access to information so they can make an informed choice prior to an abortion decision.

The parish also invites those interested in learning more about the Catholic Church to register for the Rite of Christian Initiation (RCIA), which will begin in the fall. RCIA is a sacramental process of formation that prepares individuals to live as Catholic Christians. For information, call the religious education office, 781-383-0630, or the rectory office, 383-0219.

Teachers of religious education are needed for the fall, and parishioners are encouraged to volunteer.

Volunteer at the CEA

During the summer months, some of the people who give the Cohasset Elder Affair's (CEA) programs such good support throughout the year are not as available during the summer months. The CEA would greatly appreciate hearing from anyone who is interested in joining the volunteer list.

Drivers are needed! Volunteer applications are still being accepted for the summer months to help with the local driving program. Drivers are needed in one-to-three-hour shifts, once a month, mornings or afternoons.

If you enjoy working with people and are interested in helping the seniors in your community, this is the opportunity for you. Trips involve picking up seniors and taking them to local stores, shops, post office, town hall or library, and then returning them to their homes. This could be a great way for college students to do community work, or a person on vacation who might have a few hours to spare.

Others help in serving the lunch on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. CEA's greatest need is for Tuesday and Wednesday. Volunteers can set-up, dish-up the plates, serve on trays, or clean up. If you can help or might be interested, please drop in and see how the CEA handles the luncheons.

Receptionists in the office are all volunteers. If interested in occasionally filling-in for someone on vacation or having a day off, please let CEA know. Several people work with the Outreach Worker, Carol Barrett to serve as respite workers or friendly visitors. Whichever opportunity you accept, you will make a great contribution to others' lives and will work in the company of others who are equally dedicated.

Bright fireworks illuminate the huge crowd gathered on Abington's Memorial Field for last year's night before the Fourth festivities.

Weymouth's Wessagusett Beach is aglow during last year's Fourth of July fireworks display.

Uncle Sam (Al Carpenter) is a familiar figure at Hingham's annual Fourth of July Parade.

Fabulous Fourth

Patriotism is at an all time high this year which means local Fourth of July celebrations are certain to be some of the most festive and well attended in recent history. South Shore residents need not venture far to find fantastic fireworks displays, colorful carnivals and parades in honor of America's 226th birthday! Here's some of the holiday highlights;

June 29, Braintree

—Braintree gets a jump on the Fourth of July planning its fireworks display the weekend prior to the holiday. More than 20,000 residents and visitors alike will ascend upon Braintree High School's fields on Saturday, June 29 for the South Shore's largest Independence Day gala. Free to the public, live musical entertainment will perform on stage from 4-10:30 p.m. Atlas fireworks will light the sky with several thousand shells all choreographed for visual effect. The annual public safety equipment parade with sirens blaring will visit the site at 6:15 p.m. Numerous special feature activities will be held throughout the celebration. North American Amusements will have rides and games for young and old alike. Local non-profit groups and organizations will be hosting their food and beverage booths to feed the crowds their varied tasty delights. Braintree's Independence Day celebration remains the largest free people party on the South Shore each summertime.

June 29, Hanover

This year's annual big Fourth of July Bon Fire put on by the Hanover Call Firefighters Association has been moved back to be held in conjunction with Hanover's 275th Anniversary celebration Saturday, June 29. The bon fire will be ignited at 9 p.m. behind the Sylvester Middle School in Hanover Center.

Before the big blaze, the town's chamber of commerce has planned a day-long anniversary celebration featuring a 5K road race stepping off at 9 a.m. from Sylvester field and finishing next to St. Mary's church. The entry fee is $15 in advance, $20 on race day. Applications are available at Conway Insurance, 183 Columbia Road; or at Healthtrax Fitness & Wellness,

Nachos at home

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Nachos are a great idea but usually executed so badly that they have become a self-parody. The chips are soggy, the cheese is overwhelming, and the guacamole and salsa have all the earmarks of canned, supermarket convenience, completely lacking in fresh flavor. But one can make nachos at home and make them well – at least that was my goal as I set out to create my own homemade version of this restaurant/convenience store classic.

The first question was which chips to use. A "Cook's Illustrated" tortilla chip tasting ranked Doritos Toasted Corn Tortilla Chips in first place. Unfortunately, I could not find them in this part of the country so I grabbed as many bags as I could find in the local supermarket and did a blind tasting. (Chips were tasted with a coating of melted cheese to simulate nachos.) Miguels (crispy with a nice toasted corn flavor) came out on top followed by Santitas. The losers were Bearitos (very thick and tough), Newman's Own and Tostitos became a bit soggy from the cheese, and Cape Cod had little flavor but good texture.

The Salsa

Jarred salsas are universally third-rate when compared to the real thing but I didn't have the patience for a complicated recipe. I began with a couple of medium-sized ripe tomatoes and added ingredients from there. Instead of using raw onion I added one large shallot. One small garlic clove proved to be plenty. I really like the smoky taste of chipotle chile in salsa but if you don't have any on hand jalapenos will do. I found using about one quarter of a medium chile gives the salsa a bit of heat but is family friendly. A couple tablespoons of cilantro added a burst of freshness. To round out flavor, lime juice (one tablespoon) and salt (1/4 teaspoon) were added. The easiest way to make the salsa is to add all of the ingredients except the tomato and pulse until very finely chopped. Then the tomatoes can be pulsed until chopped but still a bit chunky. You can substitute drained canned diced tomato for fresh in the instance that fresh tomatoes are not ripe and juicy. (Only use tomatoes packed in their own juices, not in a purée.)

The Guacamole

Ripe avocado, jalapeno, onion, garlic, cilantro, and lime juice are the usual players and I wanted to make it myself since a tasting of commercial guacamoles determined that the "winner" was barely edible. The secret is ripe avocados and a light hand in mashing since the guacamole should still have texture. I prefer using chopped shallot to onion — one tablespoon is just right – and a bit of minced garlic is also worth the effort. I used a modest tablespoon of fresh cilantro and a couple teaspoons lime juice and 1/4 teaspoon salt.

The Beans

These are optional but I wanted a recipe that started with canned beans to make this nacho recipe a 30 minute or less proposition. Canned refried beans are pretty tasteless so my hope was to take a can of pinto beans and transform them into refried beans without too much effort. I simply plopped the can liquid and all into a skillet and used a potato masher to break the beans down until they were mashed but still chunky. Before adding the beans to the skillet I sautéed a small garlic clove in a bit of oil for added flavor. All that was left was a bit of salt and I had refried beans that completely outclassed the canned variety. You can use the beans of your choice—red kidney, pinto, or black although I best liked the pinto.

Cheese and The Oven

I liked the flavor of the cheddar but the creaminess of jack. (Other cheese I tried—Havarti, Muenster, and American—were greasy, bland and/or stringy.) In equal parts you get the flavor or the cheddar and the smooth creaminess of the jack working together. I also found about one half pound of chips and four cups of cheese was about right for four to six folks. (The recipe also works well when using a seven-ounce bag of Miguel's chips—don't fret the extra ounce.) This amount does fit nicely onto a 9 x 13-inch oven-proof baking dish. If you happen not to have an oven proof baking dish large enough to accommodate the chips they can be built onto a cookie sheet or jellyroll pan. Once baked they can easily be slid onto your platter. It seems like common sense, but the chips and cheese do need to be layered so all chips are cloaked in cheese, not just the top. Four hundred degrees was the right oven temperature: above 400 and the chips began to brown on the edges before the cheese was fully melted; lower temperatures simply increased the baking time with no benefit.

NACHOS AT HOME

The beans are optional but easy to make. The right chips and the right cheese are the key to this simple recipe. Forget about supermarket salsa and guacamole – blind tastings discovered that they are poor substitutes for the real thing.

7 to 8 ounces tortilla chips: Doritos, Miguels, Santitas, or the chips of your choice
1 recipe refried beans (optional)
8 ounces sharp cheddar, grated, about two cups
8 ounces jack cheese, grated, about two cups
2 large jalapeno chiles, very thinly sliced (optional)
2 scallions, thinly sliced (optional)
1 recipe salsa (see above)
1 recipe guacamole (see above)
1/2 cup sour cream

Heat oven to 400 degrees and adjust a rack to the center position. Spread half of the chips in an even layer on a 9 x 13-inch ovenproof platter. Alternatively you may use a lightly oiled cookie sheet and the nachos once baked can be slid onto a platter. If using the optional beans drop small dollops onto the chips using about half. Sprinkle half of the cheddar and jack cheeses over the layer of chips and beans. Evenly add half of the sliced jalapenos. Repeat with the remaining chips, beans, cheese and jalapenos. Place in the hot oven and bake until the cheese is melted, about 10 minutes. Sprinkle with the scallions, if using, and serve immediately with the salsa, guacamole and sour cream.

Serves 4 to 6

For the Beans

1 tablespoon vegetable or olive oil
1 small garlic clove, pressed or minced
1 15.5 ounce can pinto, red kidney or black beans
1/4 teaspoon salt
Freshly ground black pepper

Place a skillet over medium heat. When hot add the oil and the garlic. Cook for about 30 seconds or until the garlic is fragrant and just starting to color. Add the beans and their liquid and use a potato masher to mash until the beans are broken down with some chunks remaining. Simmer until the beans have thickened and darkened slightly, about five minutes. Add 1/4-teaspoon salt and pepper to taste.

For the Salsa

1/4 medium chipotle chile in adobo sauce or medium jalapeno chile or to taste
1 large shallot or 1/4 small red or white onion, coarsely chopped
1 small garlic clove, coarsely chopped
2 tablespoons fresh cilantro leaves
2 medium ripe fresh tomatoes, coarsely chopped or one 14-ounce can diced tomatoes, drained
1 tablespoon fresh lime juice
1/4 teaspoon salt

Add the chile, shallot, garlic and cilantro to the bowl of a food processor. Pulse until finely minced four or five 1-second pulses. Add the tomato, lime juice and salt and pulse two or three more times or until coarsely chopped.

For the Guacamole

2 ripe avocados, preferably Haas
1 tablespoon minced shallot or red onion
1 small garlic clove, pressed or minced
1 teaspoon very finely chopped jalapeno chile or to taste (optional)
1 tablespoon chopped cilantro leaves
2 teaspoons fresh lime juice
1/4 teaspoon salt

Halve and pit the avocados. Using a spoon, scoop the flesh into a medium bowl. Using a potato masher or fork mash lightly leaving some chunks. Add remaining ingredients and combine gently with a fork.

A potpourri of garden treasures

Green thumbs up

Fabulous foliages for the shady border

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Warmth and humidity marked the official arrival of summertime as gardeners bid a grateful adieu to the cool damp weather of recent weeks. At long last, the annual and vegetable transplants that managed to survive the deluges, slugs and chilly temperatures seem to be doubling in size overnight. It saddens me to realize that the longest day of the year has passed and that there will be a little less time each evening to plant, weed, and cultivate but I welcome the lazy, hazy days of summer. Besides, a banner crop of mosquitoes has emerged making evening activities most unpleasant and nonproductive.

Throughout the growing season, the beautiful blossoms of perennials come and go, some lasting for only a few days, others persisting for more than a month. Although there are many star performers to be found in the well-planned perennial border, foliage is always the predominant player, especially in the shady garden. The color, texture and overall appearance of a plant's leaves should be paramount when selecting plant material for a perennial border as the foliage is likely to be prominent for six months or more.

Tremendous strides have been made in creating plants whose tinted foliages offer a colorful alternative to our reliance on flowers for a dramatic, long-lasting display. Dozens of familiar plants now boast splashy, variegated cultivars with leaves of green, white and yellow. Diverse shimmering, silver-gray plants unify our borders while dazzling yellows and golds, blues, and handsome, deeply hued bronze, purple or burgundy foliages are readily available to paint a colorful tapestry even when flowers have faded.

The family of coral bells (Heuchera spp.) has been extensively hybridized to produce dozens of handsome purple- and bronze-leafed varieties. Delectable cultivars include 'Chocolate Ruffles', 'Plum Pudding', 'Cherries Jubilee', 'Stormy Seas', 'Velvet Night', and 'Autumn Haze'. One of the most unusual additions is this year's new introduction, H. 'Amber Waves', a truly unique blend of gold and amber ruffled leaves topped by pale rose-tinted flowers. Originally grown primarily for the foliage, many of the newer cultivars have equally lovely flowers that attract hummingbirds. These handsome perennials offer the additional bonus of foliage that persists through the winter months. I prefer to grow these bronze beauties in part shade to provide the moisture-retentive soils they prefer and to maintain their deep, lustrous color and find Japanese painted ferns to be a particularly attractive companion.

From May to frost, low-maintenance hostas provide an elegant display of glorious foliage that cannot be surpassed for their diversity of leaf color and shape, plant habit, size and texture. Hundreds of hosta cultivars have been introduced in recent years with foliage color ranging from vibrant gold, yellow-green and lime-green to deep, dark, green, to shades of blue-green with every conceivable combination of variegation possible in white, cream or gold. Just a few of my personal favorites include Tokudama Aureonebulosa, Montana 'Aureomarginata', 'Great Expectations', 'Daybreak', 'Regal Splendor', 'Northern Exposure, 'Hadspen Blue', 'On Stage', 'June' and a darling miniature, 'Pandora's Box.

The deeply divided, richly colored, purple-bronze leaves of bugbanes (Cimicifuga) provide sensational contrast to the symmetrical mounds of handsome hostas. Cimicifuga 'Brunette' and 'Hillside Black Beauty' are elegant recent selections adorned with tall stems in late summer featuring fragrant, feathery, creamy colored bottlebrush flowers that sway in the breeze. Moisture-retentive soils are a must for robust, stately clumps to form.

A stunning contrast to the purple leafed bugbanes is the majestic foliage of Fallopia japonica 'Variegata', commonly called Japanese Fleece Flower. Four-foot reddish stems exhibit striking creamy white leaves splashed with pink and green speckles. Somewhat reminiscent of the dreaded, so-called Japanese bamboo, to which it is related, this Polygonum relative has been extremely well behaved in my garden for the past few years gradually forming a larger clump each season. Similar in appearance, Persicaria 'Painter's Palette' offers a tropical look to the shady garden with its variegated foliage highlighted by rusty red chevrons topped with slender bright red flower spikes in autumn. Occasionally a nuisance as this plant readily seeds about, I welcome its offspring and move them about or share them with gardening friends. A relatively new introduction, Persicaria 'Red Dragon' combines a unique blend of silver, mint green, red and burgundy that changes throughout the season with fluctuations in light and temperature.

Silver and gray foliage plants tend to be sun lovers but in recent years several new plants now furnish that wonderful soft colored foliage that helps to unify all other plants. Japanese painted ferns reign supreme with tints of burgundy interspersed on their elegant leaves. A new cross of painted fern with lady fern has produced a cultivar named 'Ghost' that is particularly gray. Several lungworts (Pulmonaria) provide silvery leaves as they mature including P. 'Excalibur' and P. 'Majeste'. A new favorite is Brunnera 'Jack Frost' with large metallic heart-shaped leaves and sprays of tiny blue forget-me-nots in springtime.

As the month of June draws to a close, ribbons of impatiens and begonias provide splashes of color and fantastic coleus cultivars add dramatic, multicolored accents. Add the splendor of astilbes, which begin to bloom this month with their handsome foliage and showy feathery plumes of white, red or pink, and the shady garden becomes a kaleidoscope of unequaled beauty, offering a welcome retreat from summertime heat.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26

The Capricorn moon opposes Jupiter at 3:37 a.m. and becomes inactive. This is a day to finish old business, clean, reorganize and prepare for new starts. Tackle jobs that have been left hanging and follow through. Influences turn around at 6:36 p.m., when the moon enters Aquarius. This is a great evening to socialize. Gather with friends and enjoy the good things in life.

THURSDAY, JUNE 27

An Aquarius moon today and tomorrow places the focus on group activities, community endeavors, team sports. You can make gains working with others to achieve common goals. However, an applying opposition of Mercury and Pluto places important decisions or signings off limits. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action for a few days. Thoughtless, insensitive remarks may come back to haunt you. Think before you speak.

FRIDAY, JUNE 28

Take it slow and easy this morning. Read yesterday's advice. Mercury forms a 180-degree alignment to Pluto at 11:36 a.m. Allow extra time for unexpected delays, breakdowns, distractions. People may be late for appointments. Things won't go as planned. Storm clouds move out this afternoon, and the remainder of the day rates high across the board. Forget your troubles and go for the good times this evening.

SATURDAY, JUNE 29

The Aquarius moon aligns with Uranus at 1:12 a.m. and becomes inactive until 4:00 a.m., when a laidback Pisces moon takes over. Planetary influences offer an opportunity to rest and recharge your batteries this weekend. It is best to initiate new activities before 6:15 p.m., when Mercury forms a harmonious contact to Venus. Kick back and mellow out completely this evening.

SUNDAY, JUNE 30

This day is not without its challenges. Resolve to start off with an upbeat, optimistic attitude. Although the moon travels in easygoing Pisces, it forms stressful alignments to Pluto in the morning, Mercury in the afternoon and Saturn in the evening. Stay alert and use common sense. Others may be hypersensitive and moody. Don't rock the boat. Spend time alone; enjoy favorite leisure activities, hobbies.

MONDAY, JULY 1

A flurry of planetary activity greets us during the first three days of July. Influences calm down considerably after that, and the rest of the month rates high for vacationing, partying. It may take a while for the morning fog to burn off today. The Pisces moon becomes inactive at 1:43 a.m. and travels at the tail end of the zodiac until 3:49 p.m., when it enters Aries. An applying alignment of Mercury/Saturn prompts you to count your blessings rather than getting caught up in negative thinking. Meditate for peace of mind.

TUESDAY, JULY 2

Mercury and Saturn conjoin at 7:34 a.m., 22-degrees Gemini. Sidestep morning hassles or the blues. Make up a list of things to do and stick to it. You can get a lot accomplished. Zero in on jobs that require physical labor and exertion. Get back on track with physical fitness workouts. Take better care of yourself. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 1:19 p.m. This month's new moon culminates July 10. A harmonious alignment of Venus and Saturn prompts you to spend quality time with loved ones this evening.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 3

The combination of a Mars/Jupiter alignment and Aries moon makes for a fast-paced day. If you are working, be sure to have a clear plan of action. You can be most productive. If you are vacationing, this is a great day to enjoy favorite sports or spend extra time exercising. The moon forms challenging contacts to Mars and Jupiter this afternoon, warning you to slow down. Don't overdo or take risks.

Folks flock to buy new town history

Book signing held at harbor

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It's an American story, so patriotic music on the pre-July 4th weekend was the perfect accompaniment for the unveiling of volume III of Cohasset's history.

The past 50 years are chronicled in a new book that has come to fruition thanks to one of the liveliest and most dedicated volunteer committees in town. The book that is relentlessly local also provides perspective by showing how this seaside town marched through the Eisenhower, Vietnam, Reagan and Clinton eras.

Wigmore Pierson, who receives mention in the book for his 10-year-long, cable-TV talk show that featured the politics, issues and people that shaped the town and

Program helps kids deal with stress, anger

By Evan Schiff

Returning to school can often be a stressful time in a youngsters life. After a relaxing summer spent at Sandy Beach and Fenway Park, the shock of tests, homework and papers is often a tough adjustment for students to make. However, at the Osgood school it may not be such a problem.

As part of a school improvement plan, the Osgood school has adopted a character education program and will begin teaching it this coming school year. The recently purchased program, which was bought with the help of a health grant, will attempt to supply students at the school with guidelines for problem solving, anger management, and emotional issues.

The program, called Second Step, recently received an "exemplary" rating from the U.S. Department of Education's Expert Panel on Safe and Drug-Free Schools. Osgood Principal Janet Sheehan said she is excited about the character education program.

"Any opportunity we have to teach social skills is something we look to take advantage of," she said. "It's very popular among teachers and should be very easy to integrate into the curriculum."

The Second Step program, which costs about $250 per kit,

New light at tricky corner

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

One of the most dangerous corners in Cohasset is apparently under control. MassHighway recently installed a new traffic light at the intersection of Route 3A and Beechwood Street after studies showed it to be hazardous.

The new light, installed last Wednesday, features a left-turning arrow that is supposed to reduce any conflict for oncoming traffic. The northbound traffic on Route 3A is now allowed to move first with left-turning vehicles being protected under a green arrow. Following that, both north and southbound traffic proceed straight through the intersection, followed by southbound traffic being granted a left-turning arrow.

Police Chief Bob Jackson said he hasn't received any complaints about the light since its installation. He said there has been one accident at the site since the light went up but it occurred when a car exited the Exxon station. He doesn't attribute it do the revamped intersection.

"We're hoping this is going to make it a safer place to drive,"

Silvia graduates from preservation course at UMass

The Executive Office of Environmental Affairs announces the graduation of Rich Silvia of Cohasset from the Community Preservation Institute (CPI) at the University of Massachusetts.

The Community Preservation Institute is an extension of Secretary Durand's Community Preservation Act initiative.

"It was designed to nourish students in a variety of integrated topics that communities are addressing as they continue to develop, evolve and deal with sprawl. By exploring land, water and natural resource protection, historic preservation, housing and transportation issues, graduate are better able to assist their communities," said Priscilla Geigis, director of Community Preservation.

Silvia has served on numerous committees including the Community Preservation Committee, Housing Authority, local and regional School Committees, the School Facilities Committee and the Departments of Energy's New England Energy Task Force. He is a graduate of Bridgewater State College and attended the Federal Executive MPA program at Northeastern University. He is a veteran of the U.S. Air Force (Strategic Air Command) and a former manager for both the General Motors Corporation and IBM.

Beloved benefactress dies

Jane Bancroft Cook leaves of generosity

The Lightkeepers' Residence and the Town of Cohassetlost one of its most prominent benefactors Monday.

Jane Cook, an heir to her family company of Dow Jones & Co., died at her home on Sohier Street Monday morning. She was 90.

Mrs. Cook was instrumental in the building of the Lightkeepers Residence and its first president, Joe McElroy said the project wouldn't have happened without her.

"I guarantee there wouldn't be the Lightkeepers' Residence today with her," he said. "She clearly loved the community and loved supporting it."

McElroy said the old Lightkeepers' Residence was dilapidated and the project to restore the historic structure was in danger of failing due to fiscal restraints. He said he called Mrs. Cook and before he knew it, was scaling the half-completed steps of the site with her, when she was more than 80-years-old.

"That's just the type of person she was," McElroy said. "She deserves her reputation of being incredibly generous and sensible."

On May 15, 1994, Mrs. Cook cut the ribbon at the dedication of the Lightkeepers' Residence calling the occasion "one of the most wonderful moments in my life." It marked Cook's 82 birthday. The residence's Bancroft Hall, which hosts innumerable weddings and town events, is named after her.

According to the "Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume III", Mrs. Cook was fortunate to survive her birth. She weighed only three pounds at birth and her incubator was a warming oven near the family's big stove. The home remedy was a success.

Mrs. Cook was not only a generous supporter of the Lightkeepers' Residence but also the Swim Center, the expansion of the Community Center, and the reconstruction of Minot's Light watch room, among other worthy projects and causes.

The Rev. Clifford Cutler, Rector of St. Stephen's where Mrs. Cook was a life-long member, said her wealth was not in money but in the love and friendship she received from others.

Mrs. Cook was the last of three children of Jane W.W. Bancroft, the stepdaughter of Clarence W. Barron, who bought Dow Jones from its founders in 1902. At his death, Barron left the company to his stepdaughter. One descendant of each of Bancroft's children now serves on the board.

Mrs. Cook served on the board of Dow Jones from 1949 to 1985 when its flagship newspaper, The Wall Street Journal, grew to wield international influence and the company evolved into a publicly traded, $4 billion media empire.

Mrs. Cook was 90 and had been in failing health for a decade, she was the largest family shareholder at Dow Jones.

Mrs. Cook leaves three daughters, Martha Robes, Jean Stevenson and Elizabeth Steele; six stepchildren; eight grandchildren; 11 stepgrandchildren and 13 great-grandchildren.

Naming rights and harbor plans on selectmen's agenda

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

After a two-week absence, the selectmen will be meeting at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday and have a couple key issues on their agenda.

Highlighting the meeting will be Dean Rizzo, who will be in to present selectmen with the latest updates of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation's harbor improvement plans, and Mark DeGiacomo who will come in to discuss the naming rights of the new fields which are being constructed at the old Gravel Pits off North Main Street.

Rizzo, the director of the CRC, a private entity working on village and harbor improvements with the town, has sponsored a public planning process over the last few months to help the community address public infrastructure, safety and access deficiencies around the harbor area.

The CRC has asked residents and town officials to review three approaches proposed for the harbor area and vote on their preference.

The three options include "no improvements," an approach which will undertake no changes to the waterfront area save new asphalt patching to fill reoccurring potholes. Existing walkway and infrastructure conditions would remain the same.

Another option "minimum improvements" consists of primarily replacing the existing asphalt sidewalk with a new scored concrete or asphalt surface material. A rollover curbing system could be installed but no lighting, railing, sidewalk width or road width changes are incorporated in this approach.

The other option is "moderate improvements" which would reconstruct and widen the existing sidewalks along with an application of scored concrete. There would also be an installation of vertical granite curbing, new lighting as appropriate, tree planting, a new wood or steel railing system and minor repairs of the seawalls as needed.

Rizzo has been presenting the options to various boards and public workshops for months. His hope was to garner positive recommendations from the committees so when he goes before the selectmen to present the plans, the CRC will have some support. He asked each board to make a formal recommendation before his meeting with the selectmen next week.

The results of the survey, and the boards' recommendations, will be presented to selectmen on Tuesday to determine which improvement approach the CRC should help the community proceed with.

Another item on the board's agenda is how to determine the naming rights for the two new ball fields at the Gravel Pits.

The fields of dreams became a reality in the spring when Town Meeting appropriated $200,000 to the cause. Along with the money that was spent by the Town Meeting article, the Community Preservation Committee recommended spending $100,000 on the fields and Little League will raise $150,000 for the fields.

The naming rights for the fields could significantly contribute to the money Little League needs to raise.

The current Little League field, Barnes field was named after Harold Barnes who was a strong supporter of youth-oriented activities according to the "Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume III". Assisted by Richard Potter, Barnes built both the bleachers and the fence surrounding the field. The field itself was owned by the town and leased to Little League for one dollar a year. For about 40 years the field remained unchanged until the mid-1990s when Little League raised funds and brought the field up to modern standards which included adding new bleachers, an electronic scoreboard and on-deck cages for batters.

Police crackdown on driving drunk

Nationally the crime of drunk driving kills every 32 minutes. There were 218 people killed in alcohol-related motor vehicle crashes in Massachusetts in 2000. These facts are why the Cohasset Police Department is participating in the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau's (GHSB) "You Drink & Drive. You Lose. Mobilization" through July 7.

As part of a $4,000 GHSB grant that runs through September 2002, the Cohasset Department will conduct extra traffic enforcement and OUI patrols during this mobilization.

Impaired driving is a violent crime that could cost you your freedom, your job, your license, and kill or injure you and innocent people.

"We ask the public to help us during the 'You Drink & Drive. You Lose' mobilization by staying sober behind the wheel, buckling up, obeying posted speed limits, and reporting suspected drunk drivers," said Chief Robert W. Jackson. "Also, don't let alcoholic beverages become the focus of holiday gatherings, offer non-alcoholic beverages, select beforehand a sober designated driver or use public transportation, and take a zero-tolerance position towards underage drinking."

There were eight people killed in motor vehicle crashes over the July 4th holiday in Massachusetts in 2000. Two of those crashes were alcohol-related. Alcohol-related fatalities involving motor vehicles increased 7 percent in Massachusetts between 1999 and 2000. "July 4th brings a lot of carefree times with family and friends, but everyone needs to keep their guard up against the dangers of drunk driving," said Nancy J. Luther, Executive Director of the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau.

"We ask everyone on the roadways this holiday period to buckle up, obey posted speed limits, drive sober and alert, and allow plenty of travel time for traffic and emergencies. Remember, your best defense against a drunk driver is to always wear your safety belt," she said.

Impaired driving is a violent crime that could cost you your freedom, your job, your license, and kill or injure you and innocent people. To prevent, as well as apprehend drunk drivers, the GHSB currently has traffic and alcohol enforcement grant programs with state and local police and the Massachusetts Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission totaling $1.3 million. Approximately 16,000 people are arrested annually for drunk driving in

Forest Avenue sidewalk update

The proposed sidewalk on Forest Avenue — the street that has long been described as "Roller-Coaster Road" — is moving ahead. Town Manager Mark Haddad said the bids for the sidewalk construction are out and will be returned on July 11. The bids will be for the entire sidewalk, so depending at what the bids come in at may dictate how much of the sidewalk can be installed before going back before Town Meeting for more money, Haddad said.

The town has already appropriated $190,000 for the construction of the sidewalk.

The Norfolk County commissioners approved the selectmen's request for the Norfolk County Engineers to provide engineering assistance at no cost. The engineers have long provided such services to county towns as part of the county's community service.

"They've done a great job," Haddad said about the engineers. "The street will be much safer now."

Open July 5

Folks flock to buy new town history

region through the late '80s to mid-90s, competently headed the group.

Pierson, surrounded by the flags of the 50 states at Veterans Memorial Park on Saturday for the first book signing, said it was a great day for Cohasset.

"It feels extremely good and we're extremely happy to have the baby that has been born after a labor of six years," said Pierson, who lives on Atlantic Avenue.

It was a project the town and selectmen backed early on. Town Meeting voted in October 1996, October 1998 and then again in December 1999 to fund the project. The collective votes provided $65,000 of which the committee still has $500 not including proceeds from pre-publication sales and new sales, plus private donations totaling some $35,000. About 800 copies of the new history out of the 3,000 printed were sold before publication.

Barbara Maynard, whose husband Herman was born in town 76 years ago and served as a call firefighter for more than 40 years, was in line Saturday to pick up her copy.

"The other two volumes are so well worn," the King Street resident said about the Pratt and Bigelow histories that brought Cohasset up to 1950. She and her husband have been looking forward to this book, Maynard said.

The book's author, Jacqueline Dormitzer, busily signed copies and chatted with the residents who came to the signing in the park complete with background music that included patriotic favorites thanks to a stereo system provided by the American Legion post across the street.

"It feels extremely good and we're extremely happy to have the baby that has been born after a labor of six years."

— Wigmore Pierson, committee chairman

"This is a very happy time," Dormitzer said. "The book looks beautiful and we're very pleased with people's response."

The book's dust jacket features a photograph of an aerial view of Cohasset; the cover is green with gold lettering, so it matches the town's previous two histories, and the pages are full of text and photographs of an era that is still fresh in many minds. Sewer sagas, Prop. 2-1/2 and Hollywood feature films are all included among countless other issues, happenings and local characters.

Norbert Reardon, who was born in 1953, thinks a lot will sound familiar.

"I've seen a lot (of what's in this book)," he said, pointing out that in the '50s it was possible to know everyone in town.

Former selectman Diane Sullivan, who moved to Plymouth two years ago, served as the liaison between selectmen and the book committee. She was pitching in Saturday at the book-signing table.

"It was probably one of the best committees that I ever had the pleasure of serving with," she said about the book committee. "The book is more than a history — it's about the people you know and the issues and places you're familiar with."

Although the committee has wrapped up the past 50 years, it isn't going to disband. With the selectmen's blessing, the committee is working with the school department to develop a curriculum on the town history to be taught in the schools. The group is also planning to orchestrate the reprinting of the prior two volumes of the town history complete with new forwards and dusk jackets. Proceeds from the book sales of the Dormitzer history will be used to pay for that project, the committee said.

Program helps kids deal with stress, anger

teaches a variety of social and emotional skills including empathy, impulse control, problem solving and anger management. In its kit provided for Kindergarten classrooms, Second Step includes 28 photo-lessons cards which depict a social situation for children to discuss, two puppets for role-playing games, a sing-along tape, take-home activity sheets and a laminated classroom poster with erasable pen. For the older grades, one through five, the kits remain basically the same except for different photos, and they include homework sheets.

"The aim is to teach social competency skills," Sheehan said. "We're expected to provide a framework for social values for our students and that's something that's very important to us."

The lessons in Second Step run anywhere from 15-minutes to half an hour and will probably be used one to two times a week. Sheehan said teachers will also be able to incorporate the lessons learned in the program in their everyday curriculum."

Superintendent Edward Malvey said in this day and age, character education is critical.

"It's an important ingredient to have in our school system," he said. "The Second Step program really touches on a number of issues."

Malvey said while Cohasset schools have always excelled in teaching their students academics, it needs to bring its social education to the same standards.

"We're going to start in the earlier grades and work with all of the children," he said. "We need to be attentive to all aspects of a child's learning experience especially the social and emotional ones."

The program was introduced to the School Committee last month when Sheehan presented Osgood's school improvement plan to the board. The improvement plan is a requirement for all schools in the Commonwealth and is written with the help of the School Council which is comprised of teachers, parents, the principal of the school and a community representative.

This year, along with the character education program, the Osgood improvement plan addressed academic excellence, communication and technology.

For the academic excellence aspect of the plan, the Osgood school has set its sights on analyzing MCAS results and implementing a plan to improve performance, continuing to review and revise existing curriculum so that it's consistent with established frameworks, and continuing to develop benchmarks for Kindergarten through third grade with a focus on language arts. The school also hopes to promote professional development opportunities for staff members and establish a task force to review the feasibility of implementing a full-day Kindergarten program.

"Any opportunity we have to teach social skills is something we look to take advantage of."

— Janet Sheehan, Osgood principal

The communication segment of the improvement plan highlights several issues. The school wants to promote diversity awareness and respect for human differences among the school community, mentor new Osgood families and students, update the student and teacher handbooks and continue "Curriculum Coffees" and "Family Math and Science Nights".

For technological improvements the school hopes to increase the number of computer presentation stations, collaborate with the technology coordinator to establish long-term goals for maintaining and upgrading equipment in the classrooms, and provide professional development for staff in the integration of technology in the curriculum.

"Those are the four main areas we really wanted to address," Sheehan said. "We will work hard towards the goals throughout the year."

New light at tricky corner

Jackson said. "It's something we definitely needed."

Jackson said the Police Department will continue to monitor the intersection closely for the next six months. He said if a problem still exists at that time he'll ask the state to reexamine the intersection and look at the possibility of creating turning lanes.

"This should solve the problem," he said. "If not, we'll do what we can to try and alleviate the dangers of the situation."

Town Manager Mark Haddad thanked the town's state legislators, Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, along with Bernard McCourt from MassHighway for resolving the situation.

"We're hoping this is going to make it a safer place to drive."

— Police Chief Bob Jackson

"The response to our selectmen's concerns is much appreciated," Haddad said. "I think this entire process worked very well."

One of the reasons MassHighway listened to the town's request for a resolution to the precarious intersection was a study conducted by the Boston Metropolitan Planning Organization. The study revealed that from 1997-1999 there were 29 accidents at the intersection. This is an average of 9.7 a year or 1.28 accidents per million vehicles, well above the state average of .89 accidents per million vehicles for a signalized intersection.

More than 40 percent of the accidents at the intersection involved personal injury including one fatality in 1997.

"Route 3A carries heavy traffic through volume in both directions; it is difficult for the northbound and southbound left-turning traffic to find a gap," the report stated. "In some cases drivers may miscalculate acceptable gaps and in other times, out of frustration, drivers may try to force themselves through traffic."

Drivers are needed! Volunteer applications are still being accepted for the summer months to help with the local driving program. Drivers are needed in one-to-three-hour shifts, once a month, mornings or afternoons.

If you enjoy working with people and are interested in helping the seniors in your community, this is the opportunity for you. Trips involve picking up seniors and taking them to local stores, shops, post office, town hall or library, and then returning them to their homes. This could be a great way for college students to do community work, or a person on vacation who might have a few hours to spare.

Others help in serving the lunch on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. CEA's greatest need is for Tuesday and Wednesday. Volunteers can set-up, dish-up the plates, serve on trays, or clean up. If you can help or might be interested, please drop in and see how the CEA handles the luncheons.

Receptionists in the office are all volunteers. If interested in occasionally filling-in for someone on vacation or having a day off, please let CEA know. Several people work with the Outreach Worker, Carol Barrett to serve as respite workers or friendly visitors. Whichever opportunity you accept, you will make a great contribution to others' lives and will work in the company of others who are equally dedicated. Please call 781-383-9112.

WEDDINGS & ENGAGEMENTS

MacQuarrie - Stern

Kristin MacQuarrie and Ken Stern

Jane and Christopher Kyricos of Cohasset announce the engagement of their daughter, Kristin Kelly MacQuarrie, to Christopher Kenneth (Ken) Stern, the son of Jonathan and Sydney Ladensohn Stern of Scarsdale, New York.

Kristin is a marketing manager for General Electric's Corporate Initiatives group. She holds an MBA from the Stern School of Business at New York University, and a BA with honors in Geography from the University of Washington in Seattle. She also attended Cohasset High School and Phillips Andover Academy.

Ken is a project manager at Avatar Technology, an Internet design and consulting company in New York City, and will be attending the Columbia Graduate School of Business in the fall. He holds a BA with honors from Yale University.

The couple, who live in Brooklyn, N.Y., will be married in Cohasset on Aug. 4.

Fitzgerald is Haddad's right-hand (wo)man

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

"You're looking for the Department of Public Works, that's 383-0273."

"Mark's on vacation this week, he'll be back on Monday."

In between phone calls, faxes, and visits from all of the town employees to collect their paychecks, Christine Fitzgerald, 35, sits above the fray. Her desk, though thoroughly organized, is piled high with paperwork, pictures and even a stuffed animal.

As the executive assistant in the Board of Selectmen's office, Fitzgerald acts as an extension of Town Manager Mark Haddad as well as handling the payroll for all town employees. She sits in the corner the selectmen's office, one of the most important rooms in Town Hall.

"She's terrific with the public and keeps them very happy."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

After knowing very little about town government when she begun, Fitzgerald has come to learn quite a bit. After presiding over, and taking the minutes of, almost every selectmen's meeting in the past three years, Fitzgerald knows the ins and outs of the town.

She admits that she was never into politics and didn't vote on a regular basis for sometime, but now that's all changed.

"It's amazing what community involvement can do," she said. "Sometimes it's good, and sometimes it's bad, but people can always make a difference."

Fitzgerald has also seen the benefit to a town of having a good Board of Selectmen.

"Good selectmen have to have the ability to listen what people are saying," she said. "They have to walk a fine line between being a resident of the town and being a voice that people listen to."

Fitzgerald, who lives in Whitman and is engaged to be married, said after seeing all hard work and stress associated with being a selectman feels she would never be a productive member of the board. She said the ability to separate her head with her heart has never been easy for her and thinks that's one of the qualities a good selectman exhibits.

"They sometimes have to make unpopular decisions based on what they think is best for the town, even though people may think otherwise," she said. "I think the current board has done an excellent job of that."

Over her three years in Cohasset, Fitzgerald has developed a close relationship with her boss, Haddad. She described the two as having similar personalities which can both be positive and negative.

"His wife and I joke that she's wife number one and I'm wife number two," Fitzgerald said laughing. "We are so similar, sometimes it is great and sometimes it's not."

She continued to say how much she admired Haddad's work ethic.

"He's the hardest working person I've ever met," she said. "He's juggling 100 balls at a time and they never hit the ground."

Christine Fitzgerald manages to handle myriad duties in the selectmen's office at Town Hall.

Fitzgerald said Haddad has taught her a lot and credits him, along with her previous work experience as why she is so capable in her job. Before coming to Cohasset, Fitzgerald worked with Brewster Wall Covering Company in Randolph.

Haddad said Fitzgerald is a hard worker who has done a great job for the town.

"She's great at handling a lot of responsibility," he said. "She's terrific with the public and keeps them very happy."

Haddad said Fitzgerald and Ellen Winn, who has been working in the town for more than 15 years and handles licensing, mail, and civil service issues, make a great team.

"The two of them are great," he said. "The town couldn't run so smoothly without them."

Linda Greenlaw to sign 'Lobster Chronicles' at Buttonwood Books

Buttonwood Books and Toys will host Linda Greenlaw, author of "The Hungry Ocean: A Swordboat Captain's Journey", for a return appearance at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset on Wed., July 17 from 1 – 3 p.m.. Greenlaw's first book published in 1999, detailed her life as a swordfish captain. Although she had been fishing commercially for more than 18 years, she has recently become famous for her part in "The Perfect Storm" by Sebastian Junger. Junger describes Greenlaw as "one of the best captains, period, on the entire East Coast".

Her new book, "The Lobster Chronicles: Life on a Very Small Island" (Hyperion, $22.95), describes one lobster season and is filled with stories about the eclectic group of islanders who call Isle au Haut home, personal reflections and details about lobstering as a profession. Greenlaw began her career as a cook and deckhand aboard a swordboat during her summer breaks from college. She worked her way into the captain's chair by 1986 and has skippered boats from Newfoundland to Brazil. Raised and educated in Maine, Greenlaw graduated from Colby College in 1983 where she majored in English. Reservations requested for seating and refreshment planning. Practically perfect

If there is near perfection anywhere on earth — then World's End next door in Hingham is close to the top of the list. So why does anyone travel far and wide searching for great views of the water and to commune with nature?

That's what many were asking themselves at the annual "Summer Solstice" celebration at World's End June 21.

Spring rain has turned the 251-acres green, the magnificent canopies of the trees were in full splendor and the waters of Hingham harbor and the Weir River glistened as hundreds trekked up Planter's Hill to celebrate the beginning of summer. Carefree youngsters danced to the sweet sounds of Yarina, an Ecuadorian group, as their parents unfolded blankets and spread out picnics in the cool evening air. Tractor-drawn hayrides furnished an abundance of "Norman Rockwell-esque" nostalgia for simpler times.

And yes, the golden, setting sun, leaving its sparkling reflection on Hingham Bay as sailboats floated peacefully by, provided all with a combination of wonderment and serenity.

At times like these, we are so grateful to be able to enjoy the peaceful beauty of a nature preserve right in our own backyard. It's hard to believe a world away – war rages on several fronts and here at home we're fighting a battle with terrorism.

Ironically, World's End was once considered for the site of peace-making when back in 1945, then Gov. Maurice Tobin was charged with finding a place to house the United Nations.

Well before that, World's End was a farm owned by John R. Brewer who hired renowned landscape architect Frederick Law Olmsted in the 1890s to design the winding, tree-lined carriage paths and landscaping for a proposed163-home subdivision.

And back in the 1960s, World's End was eyed for a nuclear power plant.

The United Nations went to New York; the power plant went to Plymouth and the subdivision never came to fruition. And through an extraordinary effort in the late 1960s through which $450,000 was raised, the Trustees of Reservations that dates back to 1891, was able to purchase the land from Brewer's descendants for all of us to enjoy.

On one side of the peninsula that consists of two glacial drumlins, is a spectacular view of the Boston skyline and on the other side, one can see Hull across the Weir River, and the Atlantic Ocean beyond.

Planter's Hill on that Friday was like a patchwork quilt of blankets and lawn chairs as hundreds of families that included infants to grandparents jockeyed for a spot to spread out and take in all the evening had to offer.

It was crowded, but no one seemed to mind. At World's End Summer Solstice – which is the longest day of the year — it was a time to leave all the worldly pressures and irritations behind. It's so important today that we grab opportunities like these for ourselves and our families.

If you missed the event, not to worry. You can visit World's End anytime. Hours are 8 a.m. to sunset, year-round. Admission is free for Trustees' members; non-members are $4.50; children under-12 are free. Contact the Regional Office of the Trustees of Reservations at 781-821-2977 for directions and event information; and the ranger station at World's End at 781-740-6665 for weather conditions and other questions.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Friends or foes of the harbor?

TO THE EDITOR:

As far as I can tell, not many people are favorably impressed with the apparent agenda of the Friends of Cohasset Harbor. The essence of their agenda seems to be to ensure that no changes be made to make the harbor area more enjoyable for fear that improvements might benefit Peter Roy's waterfront businesses.. They seem to visualize the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation as a sinister plot to foist unneeded improvements on an innocent and helpless citizenry, and make the ludicrous claim that public input to CRC is ignored. .This despite the CRC's constant pleas for more public participation, and the substantial revisions resulting from that participation.

Part of the Friends' mantra is that we should rely on our elected and appointed officials, and shun initiative by others. Perhaps because most of them are relative newcomers, or have not much contributed to town activities, they may not realize that much of what makes Cohasset a superior place is attributable to the initiative, energy, imagination, financial support and follow-through execution by groups of private citizens. Often that initiative has been backed by residents of above-average means, but few have the bad taste to criticize the efforts on that account. Our elected and appointed officials are primarily regulators, and not usually expected to do much initiating. Similarly, town meeting doesn't initiate; it votes on initiatives presented to it, and so is also essentially regulatory.

We should be happy that our waterfront businesses are owned by a resident, rather than by chain motels and restaurants with no personal interest or involvement in improving the enjoyability of the area. Sure, scarcity of parking creates conflict between harbor businesses and residents, but the town is better off overall with well run and prosperous local businesses.

It is noted that CRC has invited and made use of input from a wide range of residents, but the Friends seem interested in attracting only those who share their narrow and essentially negative vision.

Let us see if the response reinforces the current image, or reveals a more constructive attitude than I have charged.

Feed the beast — a piece of cake? Or major indigestion?

GREENBUSH VIEW

MARTHA A. R. BEWICK

(Questions of the day: If Greenbush will cost so much, that no other MBTA transit expansion project can be constructed for 10 years, why is it being built? If Massachusetts social service, medical and education programs are being cut in these days of fiscal crisis, why is Greenbush being built? If more than 50 percent of Cohasset's commuters to downtown Boston already take transit (1990 census), why is Greenbush being built? If Massachusetts Taxpayers and the Pioneer Institute warn that the MBTA can't afford Greenbush, why is it being built? If the state threw out 80 percent federal funding, and is paying $454,000,000 to move 1700 new transit riders out of their cars, why is Greenbush being built? If the Greenbush line will have a $6-9 million operating deficit each year, why is it being built? If trains have a negative impact on water quality, and the habitats along the track, and the T hasn't completed its environmental work, nor filed its permits with the federal Army Corps of Engineers, why is it being built? If Roxbury's minority residents need and want light rail, why is Greenbush being built in the name of "transit equity?" "It's a done deal," they've always said, "it's a done deal.")

Finally, the official MBTA planning office is open in Jackson Square in East Weymouth, and the sign is up. There were lots of hotdogs grilled last two weeks ago at the great opening. If we'd known about it, we would have lined up for a hotdog too, while we waved a sign saying "This is a really stupid project."

At last we know. This isn't a transit project, it's a jobs project. Look at the MBTA sign in Weymouth. The first line reads: "Creating jobs for today." But, what jobs? In moving into that space, employees from Restoration Furniture were displaced. Hingham employs 11,000 people already, more than 1000 in Hingham Square alone. Unemployment is only 1.2 percent. There are 25 women's owned businesses in Hingham Square. All of our Hingham Square jobs are threatened by Greenbush construction, their jobs, and parking and traffic issues.

Let's be honest about this, at long last. The "jobs for today" are construction jobs, for all those Big Dig and Mass. Water Resources guys who are moving on. The Big Dig is beginning to wind down, and MWRA construction is complete. Where will all that equipment go? Where are the jobs? Guess what? They're here! The $14 billion poured into Big Dig contracts and the $4 billion spent at Deer Island has created a large construction beast, and we must "Feed the Beast." It's our patriotic duty! Wave the flags, thump the tubs, and cook more hotdogs!

For a long time now, Greenbush opponents have said "If the Big Dig is the main meal, then we must be dessert." When they talked about inviting us to the "mitigation table," that meant that our towns sat passively and sweetly on platters like plump chickens while state and industry officials talked about how to carve us up. Yum yum.

The day after the hotdogs, the Big Dig construction team appeared on the Greenbush doorstep for a meeting with the Hingham Square merchants. They were surprised that 60 people showed up. Several of the attractive and articulate Cashman construction team announced that they had just left the Big Dig to move over to Greenbush. One of the coordinators said, that by comparison to the Big Dig, "Greenbush is a piece of cake." So, it's confirmed at last: "The Big Dig was the main meal, and we are dessert!"

It may be "cake" to the contracting team, but Greenbush has triggered high anxiety among the many merchants, who are concerned about their businesses, and their customers, and among the many residents immediately adjacent to the tracks, whose lives will be interrupted not only by construction, but by a lifetime of noise, vibration and diesel emissions. Marilyn Yorke (who doesn't yet know whether her home with its eight chimneys and five fireplaces will have to be moved into Torrent Crossing, as it shows on the plans) exclaimed: "Talk about indigestion!! Talk about heartburn!!" Talk about nightmares, and sleepless nights!! One man's cake is another man's poison.

In the midst of the smiles, and promises of cooperation while the hot dogs are grilling and amiable meetings are taking place, designs are moving beyond the 15 percemt stage — plans are in motion for the saws to hit the trees, for rock drills to blast the ledge behind Hingham Wines, and for bulldozers to chew up the corridor. "It won't be a big 'kaboom,' " we were advised when we asked about the impact of rock blasting on the Square, "but a series of small explosions."

In the midst of the smiles, and announcement of the advancing construction plans, a telling comment was made by one of the contractor's spokesmen: 'We assume that all the permits will be in hand." The battle against Greenbush today is being fought over the permits, in the courts, and in the law offices, in the state environmental agencies, and in the conservation commissions. Advocates for Transportation Alternatives still argues that the Greenbush diesel rail project is a dangerous, grossly expensive, unnecessary, unsafe, environmentally unsound project, and that there are far better transit alternatives for this region. What transit money there is should be spent in Roxbury where it's needed. We will continue to make these arguments, even over hotdogs, if we are invited.

AfTA is continuing the battle for less invasive transit alternatives that will cost a lot less — better ferry services, and better express buses. Greenbush, and the $454,000,000 of state bond money which should be invested where it's needed, is nothing more nor less than welfare for construction industry, for the MBTA unions, for Amtrak commuter rail managers, and for the legislators and gubernatorial candidates who receive construction lobbyists' contributions. Take a look at the Secretary of State's contribution lists, which are now on the Web, and you can trace the string of contributions. Call Mitt Romney's new hotline, at 1-888-END-PORK, and tell him that you want him to invest your tax dollars, not in a deficit-ridden slop-bucket (Greenbush) for construction porkers and their beneficiaries, but where the investments make sense, and achieve real transit equity. Call AfTA if you want to continue the fight at 781-740-1613.

Martha A. R. Bewick of Hingham is a member of AfTA.

HEALTH NOTES

Robbins Garage, Maxwell and saving a lot of precious land

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Every fall, I drain the oil from the engine of my sailboat, replace it, and take the old oil to Robbins Garage for disposal. Wayne or his brother takes the oil and calls to one of the mechanics to pour it down a floor drain, knowing that I'm on the Board of Health and hoping to get a rise from me, since we both know that the floor drains have been closed since the law banning th m was enacted years ago. The stories about Wayne's garage are many, but here's one you probably don't know.

What then about Wayne's Maxwell Conservation Trust? Well, Maxwell is Cynde's (Wayne's wife's) dog. I heard this from Wayne about two years ago when he had started buying up land and putting it into a conservation restricted status. I understand Maxwell is a very environmentally conscious dog, and, now, Maxwell has considerable environmentally restricted land in the trust.

Wayne, (and Maxwell's) most recent effort is important to the two towns with which Wayne has a long connection. It deals with the headwaters of the system of streams, creeks, tributaries and rivers which supply drinking water to both towns. We've all heard about the Herring Brooks(first and second), and the Aaron River and its reservoir, Lily Pond and the other streams, vernal pools and meanders which make our woods and wild places so attractive.

If the purchase the Maxwell Trust intends to make, does not materialize, a developer plans to build more than 50 homes in the area.

Their attractiveness is both an asset, and a danger. Cohasset's, and, even more so, Scituate's natural resources have been under increasing development pressure in recent years, and are presently at greater risk than ever. Large scale development in the area has accelerated the loss of open space. If the purchase the Maxwell Trust intends to make, does not materialize, a developer plans to build more than 50 homes in the area; a threat to Scituate's already burdened water resources, school system and infrastructure. And, since Scituate has weak regulations protecting the adjacent ponds from nutrients, the septic systems and lawns in the area will broadcast nitrogen into the streams going to both town's water supplies. Soon, the streams entering our respective water supplies will bring nutrients and algae, pond scum, to these vital ponds.

We have an opportunity in 2002 to save a key parcel of unprotected open space in the West End of Scituate, bordering Cohasset. This 76-acre property, currently under purchase and sale agreement, is part of the largest, unfragmented forest (450 acres) remaining in Scituate . It is also adjacent to town-owned conservation land. These lands also contribute to the protection of Scituate and Cohasset's drinking water supply and provide excellent habitat for native wildlife, including species listed by the State as rare and endangered. This property is the focus of the Maxwell Trust's current fundraising efforts.

So, next time you stop at Robbins Garage and one of the mechanics asks you if you need to dispose of engine oil, tell him you'd also like to contribute to the Maxwell Trust.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

Yes, I'm a California dreamer

TWENTY-SOMETHING

EVAN SCHIFF

The lure of the West Coast is often difficult to explain to those hugging the eastern shores. However, not being one to shy away from a challenge, I've decided to give it a try.

I recently came back from a week of vacation in San Diego where among other things, I did well, nothing. I baked on the beach, caught some waves (yes, I may be the only Jewish surfer in Boston), reconnected with old friends, cheered at a Padres game, and munched fish tacos drowned in Cholula (a high-class hot sauce). This seemingly nothing of an adventure cemented my desire to eventually move westward.

Defining the phenomenon in which many a young person leave their friends, families and comfortable lives behind for an unknown life is quite a quandary.

Now I'm sure surfing is a draw for some and the "I-wish-they-all-could-be-California-girls" is certainly a factor, but one must search beneath the tanned bodies and skimpy bathing suits to find the powerful magnet that draws everyone from Jack Kerouac and John Steinbeck, to the gold prospectors to California.

To say the attraction lies in a different type of attitude that Californians may posses about life seems too simplistic. I don't care where you were born; it has been my experience that people have similar character traits around the world. Not all Californians are surfer-dudes and not all New Yorker's are pushy, entitled, and in your face. Well, at least not all Bostonians are that way.

While it may be to elementary to call California easygoing there is certainly evidence to suggest that is that case. Two summers ago, on the first day of my internship at a main-stream television station, I showed up in a suit and my boss was wearing cut-off shorts and flip-flops.

Residents of Boston will consistently run at a full tilt to catch the "T" while Californians hardly know the benefits of public transportation. Plans are made, and kept in Boston while it's not uncommon for a friend to be waiting on your doorstep when you wake up in San Diego, the same one you made plans with 12 hours earlier.

I recently came back from a week of vacation in San Diego where among other things, I did well, nothing.

However, to characterize the entire state as slothful insults many of the hardworking people who call it home. Thriving cities such as San Francisco, Los Angeles, and Santa Barbara wouldn't flourish without the effort of many of these people, even the surfers.

I think it comes down to one thing, and bear with me here...it's the sun, that blessed fire that roars millions of miles overhead and provides us with scientific wonders such as photosynthesis and tanning.

Sure we have it "back East," and for that matter, everywhere on the planet, but there's no sun quite like the one that smiles on southern California.

Just picture this scenario, you've had a bad day of work and your favorite dinner spot has closed early. Disgusted, you drag yourself up to your apartment, only to find that the air conditioner is busted. If I were in Boston, I would seek comfort outside but suffer miserably in the suffocating heavy heat of the day, maybe watch a couple ambulances roar by my apartment, and try to find a puddle to frolic in.

In San Diego, however, I would seek my solace on the beach, lay there for hours letting the sound of the waves lull me into a sweet sleep, and then wake up to the sun setting on the Pacific. I would realize the night was coming and the air was cooling so I didn't need air conditioning anyway.

But don't get me wrong, I love Boston.

Returning home, a friend and I decided to spend all day on the Commons. There is simply no equivalent to that in California. We laughed under the weeping willows, chased geese in the duck pond and took pictures of tourists photographing their families. The history and character of the East Coast cities I've visited is unmatched by the cities out West.

But the simple pleasure of going to the beach while the air slowly cools to a reasonable temperature cannot be duplicated in the Bay State. The waning California sun melts away disappointments gradually and imperceptibly. Maybe it's because standing in front of the Pacific Ocean watching the sun playing hide-and-seek with the horizon tends to put the day's annoyances into their rightful perspective.

There's no magic formula that the West is hiding from us, no fairy dust that makes people seem to enjoy life just a tad more. Just miles of beaches, many of which remain so sparsely populated that solitude is easy to find.

And maybe, it's just the lingo.

"Yo! Bro! Let's go grab a burrito," my California friend said to me on the last night of my vacation as we watched the sun drop behind the water. "That was so gnarly."

Gnarly indeed, good buddy, gnarly indeed.

Prothonotary Warbler — a rare visitor to the area

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

In the world of birds Prothonotary Warblers (Protonotaria citrea) are small songbirds with golden heads and breasts, olive-green backs, blue-gray wings, and prominent black eyes and bills. In the world of humans, prothonotaries are principal law clerks or notaries, the first having been appointed in the Byzantine court. Prothonotaries in the Catholic Church are members of the College of Prothonotaries Apostolic that is charged with recording canonization of saints and signing Papal Bulls. Court systems around the world use prothonotaries, especially in England. Some but not all of the United States have prothonotaries. The golden cowl worn by some prothonotaries is thought to have suggested this warbler's name.

It was first reported on May 10 or 11 and was singing and carrying nesting material into a hole in a snag at the northeastern end of the pond.

The word "prothonotary" is a corruption of the word "protonotary", which has the accent on "no", as in notary, rather than on "thon". The Latin word protonotarius means first notary or scribe. Arthur Cleveland Bent is one noted ornithologist who was upset with this corruption. In his "Life Histories of North American Birds", he quotes Bagg and Eliot to express his own sentiments. "What a name to saddle on the Golden Swamp-bird! Wrongly compounded in the first place, wrongly spelled, wrongly pronounced!...Here, certainly is a bothersome name fit only to be eschewed!"

Prothonotary Warblers are primarily birds of southern swampland, flooded bottomland and wet woodland. According to Veit and Petersen, they breed "from western Iowa, southwestern Minnesota, southwestern Ontario, and Long Island, New York, south to eastern Texas and central Florida." They are not often seen in New England, with only one definite and two probable breeding records in Massachusetts. This made the recent appearance of a Prothonotary Warbler at Triphammer Pond in Hingham an exciting one. It was first reported on May 10 or 11 and was singing and carrying nesting material into a hole in a snag at the northeastern end of the pond. It was still singing and going in and out of the hole on June 3. I did not see or hear it on two separate visits after that. Interestingly, there was also a report of a singing male prothonotary in Connecticut at about the same time.

Prothonotary Warbler

The Prothonotary Warbler is the only warbler in eastern North America that nests in cavities. (The other cavity nesting warbler is Lucy's Warbler, found only in the southwest.) They will use man-made cavities such as milk cartons, coffee cans, or mailboxes, and birdhouses, not just natural cavities. Males usually arrive before females on the breeding ground and begin to put moss in a suitable cavity, or perhaps in several. When the female arrives later, she chooses the best from his efforts and finishes the nest. Most often these cavities are in dead trees near water. The snag at Triphammer was in the water, but near the shore. Baby prothonotaries can swim short distances if their first flight out of the hole isn't strong enough to make it all the way to land. Prothonotary Warblers are quite susceptible to parasitism by Brown-headed Cowbirds who usually leave cavity nesters alone.

Strange as it may seem, the Prothonotary Warbler figured rather prominently in the Alger Hiss case in 1948-49. Whittaker Chambers, an ex-Communist, accused Hiss, a respected government official, of being a Communist spy. Although Chambers claimed to know Hiss well, Hiss denied knowing Chambers. In preliminary hearings before the House Un-American Activities Committee, a congressman named Richard Nixon set out to determine whether Chambers did indeed know Hiss. To do this, he asked many questions requiring detailed information about Hiss' private life. When asked about Hiss' hobbies, Chambers replied that both Hiss and his wife were amateur birdwatchers, and recalled how excited Hiss had been when he had sighted a rare Prothonotary Warbler. In his book, "Witness", Whittaker Chambers states, "It was that beautiful bird...that first clinched the Committee's conviction that I must have known Alger Hiss. A mind might figure out...how I might have known the answer to the other questions. But not the prothonotary warbler." As it turned out, a Congressman McDowell on the Committee was also a bird watcher who understood the thrill of seeing a Prothonotary Warbler.

The Prothonotary Warbler was listed as endangered in Canada in 1996, and in the United States is on the watch list of Partners in Flight, being considered moderately vulnerable. Although the bird at Triphammer sang his "tsweeet-tsweeet-tsweeet-tsweeet-tsweeet" song valiantly for several weeks, I am afraid his efforts to attract a female were in vain. He certainly gave a lot of pleasure to local birders while he was trying.

Firecrackers are no more

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

For the past couple of weeks I have been unable to shake the uneasy feeling that all is not right, that this is simply Thursday, July 4 and not that holiest of American holies, the Fourth of July.

I was busy scratching the dangerous phrase, "under God," from the pledge of allegiance and hoping some of the red, white and blue might rub off on me the other day, when the answer hit me.

There's no noise. I haven't heard the sound a firecracker going off since I got stuck in traffic on Blue Hill Avenue in Mattapan and those Uzis and AK47s weren't really fireworks, they only sounded like them.

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth, every year by July 3 our neighborhood in East Braintree sounded like D-Day in Normandy and smelled like the remains of an unlucky munitions factory.

Now, I see where Michael Hartman of Randolph was arrested for storing some 100 boxes of fireworks worth more than $50,000 with the intent to sell and could get at least a year in jail and a $500 fine.

Your average red-blooded American boy in the 1930s used to shoot that much off every night. Or at least it seemed that way to someone who was trying to sleep or coax a badly frightened cat out of a tree.

I also read that a billboard company, Clear Channel Outdoor, got so many complaints that they removed two billboard directing Massachusetts residents to fireworks stores in New Hampshire.

One of the stores is called "Three-Finger Eddie's," which may explain to you why fireworks were banned in Massachusetts in the first place — so that more of us could have a full complement of five fingers on each hand.

It's a shame that the urge to protect youth from itself has deprived the kids of today of some of the simple, if a trifle risky, pleasures of yesterday, like jumping ice cakes in the Fore River or reciting the pledge to the flag at the Watson School.

In those days, the Fourth of July would begin for the kids two or three weeks before the Fourth when a long-vacant neighborhood store front would suddenly blossom with activity.

Soon, it would be filled to the ceiling with boxes emblazoned with yellow and red Chinese characters and enough English to tell you that they contained "Black Cat" or "Red Dragon" firecrackers.

They came in strings of 50 and, if you had the dough, you could shoot them off all at once or, since this was the Depression, you didn't have the dough, you carefully unstrung them and shot them off one at a time.

The weakest were called "ladyfingers" and, when you touched them off with a piece of slow-burning "punk," they went "poof!" The strongest were "cherry bombs," which you lit and ran like heck before the sound knocked you over.

But the most popular fireworks were called "salutes," and the best way to handle them was to cover them with an empty can, touch your "punk" to the wick and see how high you could blow the can.

The next best thing was to stick a salute into one of those holes in telephone poles where the linemen put their climbing spikes and let fly. On July 5, in our neighborhood, the poles looked like a war zone.

Every now and then . . . Hold it! . . . What was that? . . .A firework? . . . Naw . . . It was just the kid down the street with his Uzi . . .

Where was I?

Political chicken and other governmental menu items

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

Recap and analysis of the week ending June 28 in state government.

The Romney decision – yes, yes, he can appear on the ballot – was pretty much an anticlimax by the time it occurred, so the time is right to discuss what was in large part a political week around state government. And with the warm weather finally here it also seems appropriate to indulge in a modest picnic of political items:

• Any good picnic needs chicken. The best thing that happened last week is that one of Shannon O'Brien's campaign assistants gave the Mitt Romney chicken the finger. The chicken – actually a college student in a chicken suit, not a real chicken – has been following O'Brien around to suggest that the state treasurer supported the residency challenge against Romney. One could understand why this would irritate the campaign staffers who travel with O'Brien – but not why one of them would flip the bird the bird, in full view of a television camera.

• Around the Statehouse, the most common conversation this political year is probably the Tom Birmingham one. People who don't like the Senate president say it's no surprise he's gone from 13 percent in the polls in January to, well, 13 percent in June. But a lot of people do like him, and they're surprised that campaign's made so little motion. "He's been up on TV!" the exclamation goes. "TWICE!" is often the response. (Cool political guys say "up on TV;" one "goes up" with political ads.) There's an expectation that ads are magic; the voting public must respond if the candidate goes up with ads, the common understanding goes. Often ads do work, studies show, and Birmingham's got $3 million to run them. But nothing to show for it. Maybe he really doesn't come across as likable; maybe it's the budget crisis; maybe it's because he runs half the Legislature. Simply trailing O'Brien would not be a head-scratcher; politics is tough. But Birmingham's absolute lack of progress with the voters remains a mystery much talked about under the Dome this summer.

By no means was the news only, or merely, political last week.

• For years, the Senate had not bothered to observe a rule on its books saying sessions should open with the pledge of allegiance. But with the issue suddenly much in the news – and with the News Service inquiring as to whether the Senate was going to follow its rule – the Upper Branch dutifully recited the creed before last Thursday's session.

One could understand why this would irritate the campaign staffers who travel with O'Brien – but not why one of them would flip the bird the bird, in full view of a television camera.

• With no governance plan in place after years of dispute, Acting Gov. Swift and House Speaker Thomas Finneran concurred publicly Wednesday (June 26) that legislation establishing a board to oversee management and financial support for the swath of green above the Central Artery needs to be passed now. The pair, and other key leaders such as House Transportation Chairman Joseph Sullivan (D-Braintree), agreed on a July 10 target date for a plan. The idea has been discussed publicly extensively, but activists are warning against back-room deals and calling for additional public input.

• The business-backed watchdog group MTF said that even after extensively raising taxes, cutting programs and raiding reserve funds, House and Senate budget negotiators have not addressed a $650 million shortfall in the budgets approved for the fiscal year that began Monday. MTF said leadership is not fully addressing just how bad the black hole of revenue decline really is. And the state is not embracing a host of savings initiatives, including scaling back bonuses for police who earn higher education degrees, eliminating retirement system abuses, and passing reforms to make public construction less expensive.

• Complaints have been heard lately that Massachusetts has not passed a single piece of legislation to address terrorism since the attacks of Sept. 11. Acting Gov. Swift moved to address that last Thursday, filing a package of five bills that would "criminalize" the carrying of concealed weapons in airports and near planes; toughen strictures on substances such as false anthrax; make it a specific crime to possess and use weapons of mass destruction; make public records such as floor plans harder to obtain; and require new permits for the storage of explosives for legitimate use.

• House leadership offered members a few days to file amendments to what started as a $475 million bond bill. File them they did, and when the bill passed the House Tuesday (June 25) , its bottom line was $645 million. Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, made a speech – the only significant one during the session – decrying the loading up of the measure. But it passed 123-18. The bill's formulation was the latest example of what has become the norm on Beacon Hill – laws are written in private and passed after pro forma debate.

• Several months after the Lottery had 13 vehicles taken for auction by Clean Elections system supporters, the Lottery bought a new one for almost $28,000. The Lottery says it needs the SUV to get up a mountainside to service data-transmission antennas.

• Warren Tolman will very likely receive an infusion of $2.5 million in taxpayer campaign funding before all is said and done this election year, in addition to the $740,000 in public campaign finance he's already received. That would give him $1 million for each percentage point he registered in a recent Herald poll of likely voters.. Tolman hopes that woebegone status may be transformed once he starts spending the auction proceeds currently funding Clean Elections. In Lakeville, community leaders are concerned about the impact of the impending auction of the old Lakeville Hospital site.

The purpose of the ZAC is to study and report periodically to the Planning Board to recommend updates to the zoning bylaw and zoning map. Given the level of interest from various boards, commissions and individuals regarding possible zoning changes, the ZAC will place an annual call for zoning proposals. A submission deadline several months in advance of town meeting enables the ZAC adequate time to provide thoughtful recommendations to the Planning Board for possible town meeting action.

The ZAC is an ad-hoc committee of the Planning Board consisting of the following members: Al Moore, Planning Board; Ben Lacy, Zoning Board;; Merle Brown, Board of Selectmen; Veneta Roebuck, Conservation Commission; Rich Henderson, Citizen Member; Mark DeGiacomo, Citizen Member; Liz Harrington, Town Planner; and Bob Egan, Building Commissioner.

Dutch Carillonneur to play

The second program in the 78th Season of Summer Carillon Recitals on the Cohasset Carillon in the tower of St. Stephen's Church on Sunday evening, July 7, by Gijsbert Kok, Carillonneur of the cities of Weesp, Voorschoten and Zoetemeer in The Netherlands. Kok's program will feature original music for carillon by Ronald Barnes, as well as transcriptions of works for other musical media by Van Noordt, Haydn, Gade, Pre'vert, and Hellmesberger. He will also improvise on a folksong.

The recital begins at 6 p.m., is free of charge, and will take place regardless of weather conditions. Printed programs will be distributed on the Cohasset Common, and will also be available in a program stand on Highland Avenue extension by the church courtyard. Listeners are encouraged to bring lawn chairs, blankets and picnic suppers to the common or the courtyard. In case of rain, the bells may be heard from your parked car. Following the recital there will be an "open tower" tour and carillon demonstration for those who wish to climb the tower's 45 stairs.

For further information, telephone St. Stephen's Church, 781-383-1083 weekdays between 9 a.m. and noon, or the Church Carillonneurs, Sally Slade Warner, at 978-475-2599, or the Assistant Carillonneur, Mary Kennedy, at 781-383-9599.

Band concerts on the Common

During the past 11 seasons, concert funding has been provided through the generosity of the South Shore Playhouse Associates, Inc. The South Shore Music Circus donations are matched by a grant from the American Federation of Musicians, in New York City.

Based upon continued South Shore Music Circus funding, the schedule for the 2002 season is Tuesday, July 9, and Tuesday, July 23, at 7:30 p.m. on the Cohasset Common.

Performances will be by the 30-piece South Shore Concert Band under the direction of Richard P. Whitmarsh.

Concerts are free of charge and the public is invited. It is a good idea to bring either lawn chairs or blankets to sit on, and from time to time, insect repellent is a good item to have available. You may call the recreation office at 383-4109 to check on the status of concerts should you be in doubt as to weather conditions.

Lots of years ago people fought for us to be free. We get to do things we want to do because brave people fought a war for us. We still have brave people who help us like firemen and policemen. Our country's military are very brave people too. They keep us safe. Other countries like Israel and Palestine scary right now. People are being hurt. On the 4th of July we will have fun and watch fireworks. We will watch a parade and have cookouts. I'll have fun with my friends but I'll still think about the other countries that don't have freedom. Hopefully some day they will.

This year July 4th will touch every America's heart. We all know how devastating September 11th was. For months our country was filled with sorrowful hearts. Although, together we all pulled through to make our country a free place once again. No we truly know how strong America can be. We have realized that there and bad people in the world but if we act as one strong country we can get through any bad situation together. Every act of kindness makes all the difference. People have started donating to charities, going to church more often, being kind to people they don't even know. Also, everyone has been showing red, white and blue. Whether it is on their car, their clothes, or even a flag hanging from their doorway, we are all working together. They can dent the walls of the World Trade Center but they can't dent the walls of America. That is why July 4th is going to be a very special day.

When the Fourth of July comes around, I feel a sense of pride and deep admiration for my country. I remember the story of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, which created a nation made for and linked to us all. "For the people and by the people." It's important to know of America's connection to our lives. I, for example, feel a very important connection to that founding day in 1776. I attend Boston Latin School, the first school in America, founded in 1635. Five signers of the Declaration of Independence also attended Latin: John Hancock, Samuel Adams, Benjamin Franklin, William Hooper and Robert Treat Pane. Independence Day makes me realize how my school molded the minds of our founding fathers. I experience what they experienced, studying many of the same subjects and sharing a bond between myself and those great leaders. The Fourth of July reminds us of our historical roots. We celebrate our patriotism and common American heritage, no matter what country we originated from. We're reminded of how we're all connected to that celebration, of being a unity, of being individuals, of being free.

At a loss

Post 118's losing streak reaches six

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Scott Arnold is at a loss...just like his team.

He feels he has one of the most talented baseball teams top to bottom in the American Legion's District 6, and nothing will change his mind, not even the six losses in a row it has suffered.

"We're just not playing good baseball right now, and it's gotten contagious," said the longtime Cohasset Post 118 Legion coach following the 8-2 loss to Canton that dropped his team to 3-6-1 Monday night. "We made five errors last night (in an 8-2 loss to Weymouth) and eight tonight. What's happening right now is just unbelievable. Kids at this level are supposed to make these plays"

Starting Post 118 pitcher Chris Carr pitched well enough to win Monday night, according to Arnold, but the errors proved devastating to his cause, as did the three balks he committed himself in trying to prevent Canton players from continually stealing on him.

The problems the team has been having of late have been complicated by the absence of several top players. Monday's was Carr's first

Maitland moves on to BU after marvelous high school sports career

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

This summer, Cohasset will say farewell to the top performing athlete during the 2001-2002 school year. His three-sport four-year career can stack up with any other standout from the area and his senior year with anyone in the state. That senior of course is Pete Maitland.

Anyone close to Pete knows how modest he is when it comes to his achievements. But that did not stop him from being named to the South Shore League All-Star team five times amongst his three sports: soccer, basketball and track.

Maitland rounded out his tenure as a Skipper athlete with his best sport, track and field, making another impressive run back to All-States. As a junior, Maitland became the first Cohasset athlete to advance to the New England meet for track since the early 1980's, finishing there17th in the javelin.

This year, serving as a captain for the second straight year, Maitland helped lead the track team to its second consecutive undefeated South Shore League season, earning the final banner for Sullivan Gym.

Maitland consistently blew out the competition in the javelin in dual meets, averaging 175 to 180 feet per throw. He also scored critical points with a 5'10" high jump that was good for second in the league and a 2:10 time in the 800-meter that won the event in the tight matches against Mashpee and Abington.

At the Class D State Meet, Maitland rose to the challenge set for him by coach Al LaFountain by throwing a personal best 184 feet. The throw easily qualified him for second place and a berth in the All-State Meet.

However, at All-States, Maitland's normal javelin, the one he had grown accustomed to all year, weighed in one tenth of an ounce under the 800 gram minimum at the pre-meet inspection. Maitland was forced to spend the valuable warm-up time searching for a friendly face

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process was not an easy one.

Several of the young men you see listed here as "Honorable Mentions" received serous consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

After consulting with area coaches, however, we feel secure that we chose the top 14 male athletes and two relay teams in Marinerland for this honor.

Pete Maitland

Pete Maitland – Senior (Capt.)
Javelin — Cohasset

Last spring, became the first Cohasset High trackster in at least five years to advance to the New England Track and Field championships by finishing fifth at the All-State meet in the javelin with a throw of 178-feet, 6-inches...fell short of that this year, but still had a very solid season and finished it up by taking second at the state Class D meet with a throw of 184'5" (re-setting his own school record), followed by a 13th at All-States (163'04")...was unbeaten in the javelin in dual meet competition, and also won the South Shore League meet, setting a new meet record (179' 3")...an SSL All-Star...also finished second in the league meet in the high jump...regularly placed in the 800-meter race, as well as with the 4x400 relay team... always competed in maximum of four events, generally placing in all four to help the Skippers to consecutive unbeaten seasons in South Shore League competition...Cohasset went 27-2 over his four year career...a five year member of the varsity track team, as Cohasset eighth graders were once allowed to compete at the high school level...also a standout soccer and basketball player in his time at Cohasset High, earning SSL all-star berths as a senior in both these sports as well, and a spot on the Eastern Mass. All-Star team in the former sport...Pete will attend in the fall...Cohasset track coach Al Lafontain: "Pete is just a super competitor. Sometimes he seems cool on the outside, and you don't even know if he's excited to be going to State's or New England's, or whatever, but he rises to the occasion, so you know he's got a fire burning. He had real high expectations for himself."

Royals wear AL crown

Sliding catch by Bell preserves championship win

Cohasset Youth Baseball concluded its American League season on Saturday, June 24, with a spectacular season-ending championship playoff game between the Royals and the Mariners.

This was the rubber game of a best two-out-of-three series between these two evenly matched teams. The squads had split the previous two games, with the Mariners taking game one 5-4 and the Royals forcing a game three with a 13-6 win in the second game of the series. Play during the first two games was marked by tremendous hustle on both sides, with some fine offensive and defensive play.

Game three lived up to fans' expectations, as both teams continued to display fine baseball. The Royals jumped out to an early lead and had stretched the lead to 8-4 during the middle innings. However, the Mariners showed great determination and pride as they stormed back to close the gap to 8-7 after five innings.

The final inning was filled with memories that will live on. Mariner hitters were determined to make a final run. Royals fielders were ready to make the plays. After the first two Mariner batters reached base, Royals pitcher, Paul Guinee, reached back for something special. He struck out the next two Mariner batters, bringing the game to its climatic moment.

With fans on both sides rooting their players on, both sides dug in. What happened next was magical. The Mariners Gabriel

Tim Baird – Senior (Capt.)
800 – Cohasset

Tim Baird

Tim wrapped up a brilliant high school track career finishing second at the state Class D meet in the 800 with a time of 2:00.54…he slipped to 15th with a time of 2:02.22 the following week at the All-State meet in Worcester…always competed in the maximum allotted four events, generally placing in all four to help the Skippers to consecutive unbeaten seasons in the South Shore League… broke the magic two minute mark in the 800 for the first time at the Weston Twilight Invitational…set a new SSL meet record to with the 800 in 1:59:12… also regularly ran the mile and 2-mile… Cohasset went 27-2 over his last four years…a five year member of the varsity track team, as Cohasset eighth graders were once allowed to compete at the high school level…also a standout soccer player for C.H.S….has deferred his freshman year at the University of Richmond in order to perform volunteer service with Americore…intends to run track in college, and has been in contact with Richmond coach…Cohasset track coach Al Lafontain: "Tim is just an all around natural athlete. Sometimes it doesn't even see m like he was working that hard, but he is. He's a great competitor and he always expected a lot of himself."

Ian Kidder — Junior
Triple Jump — Cohasset

Ian Kidder

A jack of all trades for the Skippers, Ian played a huge part in each of their back-to-back unbeaten seasons…regularly placed in sprints (200), jumps (the triple being his specialty), on the field (javelin) and in relays (a member of the 4x100 team)…the 4x100 relay team qualified for All-States by finishing third at the Class D meet, and 15th at All-States (45.17)… barely missed out on qualifying for All-States individually in the triple jump, his leap of 39-feet-10-inches good for sixth place…won the triple jump competition at the SSL meet…also played soccer and basketball for Cohasset High… Cohasset track coach Al Lafontain: "Ian came a long way this year. He got a little bit of speed behind him, tried a new event (triple jump) and things started clicking. He seemed to really fall in love with track this year and totally sold out to it. Of course, it helps when you're winning, so that just fed on itself. He's worked extremely hard."

Jared Krupczak – Junior
100 — Cohasset

Jared Krupczak

Ain't sibling rivalries grand?… Jared seems determined to climb out from the shadow of big brother Brian (CHS, class of 2001), the two time Class D 200-meter champion…emerged this spring as a force in the 100, capping things off with a second place finish at the state Class D meet (11.64)…he then reached the semifinals at All-States, but fell short of cracking the top six that moved on to New Englands'…also qualified for All-States as a member of the 4x100 relay team that qualified for the event by finishing third at the Class D meet…the squad finished 15th at All-States (45.17)…also a standout for the CHS squad in the long jump, finishing first in dual meet competition several times this season…also played varsity basketball for CHS this year…Cohasset track coach Al Lafontain: "Jared really came out of no where this year, which is a testament to all of the work he put in in the off-season. It just goes to show you what can be accomplished with hard work."

Chris Orr - Senior (Capt.)
300 Hurdles - Hingham

Chris Orr

A no-brainer here…Orr was the New England Champion in the 300-meter hurdles this year, winning the meet in school record-breaking time (38.53)…One week earlier, Orr won the All-State Championship in the same event, running a then personal best 38.74…Ironically, Orr was second at the State Class C Meet…The senior also won the State Coaches Invitational this year (38.72)…A three-time Patriot League All-star, Orr led the Harbormen to a second-place finish in the league (5-1)…Orr went undefeated in the Patriot League in the 300 lows for the past two seasons, winning All-League titles both times…Although most well known for the 300's, Orr also consistently scored points for Hingham in the long jump (20'4"), 100-meter hurdles (15.7), and high jump (5'9")…Orr finished fourth in the long jump at the Class Meet (18'2")…Orr will attend Trinity College next fall where he will continue his running career. Hingham coach Fred Jewett: "The coaches in Patriot League said that if they gave an MVP award, Chris would be the recipient. A lot of kids don't have the dedication it takes to reach this level, but Chris does. He has a tremendous work ethic and has the sense and confidence to do what he knows he can do."

Dan Nastou - Senior
Discus - Hingham

A breakout season for the Hingham senior, Nastou took second in the discus at this year's State Class C Meet (140'9")…He went on to the All-State Championships and finished 14th (130'11")…Nastou won the discus (110'2") and shotput (44'3") events at this year's South Shore Principal's Meet…A two-time Patriot League All-star, Nastou's consistent performance in the field helped lead the Harbormen to a second place finish in the league (5-1)…Nastou threw a league-best 52'10" in the shotput in a win over Rockland…Formerly a wrestler, an ankle injury prevented him from competing last winter so instead, he competed in indoor track…There he was named the Patriot League's Scholar Athlete…A PL All-star, Nastau was one member of Hingham's second-place discus relay team at the Class C Relays…Nastou plans to attend college and may continue his track career. Hingham coach Fred Jewett: "Dan's a hard working kid. He and the other guys worked together all the time. When the others went home, they'd be out there practicing. He made my job a lot easier."

Steve Mills - Senior
Discus - Hingham

Had a breakout season in the throws for the Patriot League runners up Hingham…Mills became one of the best discus and shot put throwers in the league and was a third of Hingham's second-place discus relay at the Class C Relays…Individually, Mills was fifth at the State Class C Meet in the event, just missing a trip to the All-State Championships…Mills also recorded the league's best discus throw in a meet against Rockland…Threw about 118' last year…Recently won the South trials in the shotput at the Bay State Games with 46'…His best throw this spring was 47'8" after throwing 38' last year…A Patriot League All-star, Mills volunteered teaching youngsters how to throw the discus and shotput at the Hingham Junior High School…Mills will be off to college in the fall and may continue his track career. Hingham coach Fred Jewett: "He's a very active person. He's an excellent student and a great kid. To see how far he's come as an athlete in just one year is amazing. I knew he was talented, but had no idea he was capable of this."

P.J. Welch - Junior (Capt.)
Discus - Rockland

Still just a junior, Welch was among the Patriot League's top discus throwers and until the last meet of the season against Hingham, had the league's best throw (130'9")…Welch finished second in the discus at the Patriot League All-League Meet and was fourth in the shot put (43'11")…Welch qualified for the State Class C Meet in both events and placed sixth at the meet in the discus, just two places away from a trip to All-States…A Patriot League All-star, Welch serves as an unofficial assistant throws coach for head coach Tim Owens, who also honored Welch with as a junior captain…Also a talented sprinter, Welch ran in a few 100-meter races this spring as well…Welch is also a tackle on the RHS football team and will again captain the track team next spring. Rockland coach Tim Owens: "PJ. is very smart and is the nicest kid I've ever coached. I made him captain as a junior because that's the type of leader he is. He's a very hard worker."

Nick Rogers - Sophomore
200 meters - Rockland

One of a slew of talented Rockland sprinters, Rogers emerged from the pack as the frontrunner…The sophomore sprinted to a second-place finish in the 200 meters at the Patriot League All-League Meet this season…Rogers also ran a leg on the Patriot League champion and RHS record-setting 4x100 team (along with Graham Parnaby, Mark Crawford, and Nick Lamborghini) with a time of 46.2…Rogers only lost one 200-meter race all season long and qualified for the State Class C Meet in the event…A Patriot League All-star, Rogers is also a talented 100-meter runner…Rogers also plays soccer for RHS in the fall and will return to the track next spring as one of the team's top sprinters. Rockland coach Tim Owens: "Nick was a pleasant surprise for us this year. We knew he was a competitive athlete, but couldn't have imagined the success he had this season as a sophomore. He's one of the best sprinters we have."

Dennis Hologitas - Sophomore
110-meter hurdles - Rockland

Was a standout hurdler on the Bulldog track team this season…Seen by many as the Patriot League's best 110-meter hurdler, Hologitas suffered a hardship in the finals of the event at the PL All-League meet as a fall left him in sixth…Entering the race, Hologitas had recorded the fastest time of the preliminary heats…Just a sophomore, Hologitas set a new school record in the 110-meter hurdles with a time of 16.3…He was also a consistent scorer in the 300-meter hurdles for the Bulldogs…In addition to track and field, Hologitas is also competes on the RHS football team in the fall and basketball team in the winter…He will be among the top returning athletes to the track team next spring. Rockland coach Tim Owens: "He's the best hurdler I've ever had in my nine years as coach at Rockland. He's only a sophomore and already is well on his way. He had the best time in the preliminaries (at the PL Meet) and he would have won the race."

Paul Maniscalco - Sophomore
Multiple events - Hanover

In just his first season of track and field, Maniscalco emerged as the Hanover boys' leading point-getter this season…A multiple event athlete, Maniscalco excelled in the 100 meters, 200 meters, long jump, and high jump…Was voted the sole Patriot League All-star for the Indians (3-4-1) this season…His performance in each event was instrumental in turning the Hanover High boys track program around this season after going 0-6 in contests last year…At this year's All-League Meet, Maniscalco finished fifth in both the 100 and long jump, and ran a leg on the fifth-place 4x100-meter relay…The sophomore qualified for the State Class D Meet in the 100 meters (11.5) and long jump (19' 3 1/2") but was unable to attend…Mansicalco has run 24.9 in the 200 and cleared 5'6" in the high jump…Also a talented soccer player, Maniscalco was the starting goalie on the HHS boys squad last fall. Hanover coach Brett Johnson: "This was Paul's first year doing track and he ended up being a God sent. After going winless last year and losing two top athletes, I didn't have great expectations for this season. But Paul filled up the holes on the team quite nicely. He's a sponge. He wants to learn and takes everything in."

Jeff Alexandre – Senior (Capt.)
100 – Scituate

Went unbeaten in dual meet competition in the 100-meter race…finished second on a lean at the tape to East Bridgewater's James Gambee at the Patriot League meet (who he'd beaten earlier in dual meet competition)…finished fifth at state Class C meet (11.9), 2-10ths of a second behind the fourth and final qualifier for the All-State meet…actually ran an 11.4 in the first of two races at the class meet, but only the second run counted…his top time on the season of 11.1 would have placed him first in this race…always competed in the maximum allotted four events at dual meets (100, 200, long jump, triple jump), and was easily the team's top point producer, finishing several meets with over 20 points…played SHS football all four years, and was a member of the school wrestling team his freshman and sophomore years before deciding to run indoor track the last two winters…also involved with high school chorus…will attend Valencia University in Orlando, Fla. and major in Business Management…Scituate boys track coach Bob Keefe: "I don't know where we would have been without him this year. Obviously, he was a huge part of our team accomplishments. Just as important, though, he was a great leader by example. The other kids on the team all looked up to him so much. He's a fierce competitor, but he's also soft spoken. He kept things loose when he wasn't competing, which was important to a lot of younger guys we had. Jeff is just a class act all the way."

Ted Hughes – Senior (Capt.)
200 — Norwell

Ted Hughes

Ted was the ultimate team guy for the Norwell boys spring track team these last two years… this versatile athlete competed in the maximum of four events at every league meet this year, though only rarely were they the same four events...he'd compete in the 100, 200, 400, 4x4 relay, long jump, shot put and/or high jump, depending on the team's greatest need on that particular day…also a standout football and basketball player for Norwell High…qualified for states in the 100, 200 and 400, his top teams in these events, respectively, 11.5, 23.8 and 52.5 seconds…opted to run the 200 at the Class D meet, and finished 11th overall in an extremely strong field…also excelled in the shot put in dual meet competition, topping out at 39' 9"…a standout as well in basketball and football these last two years at Norwell High…attended B.C. High his freshman and sophomore years…has been recruited to play football (as a wideout) at St. Anselm, and will begin classes there this fall…the 6-foot-4 speedsters is also considering trying his luck as a walk on in basketball…Norwell track coach Mike Murray: "Teddy is an exceptionally gifted and versatile athlete who would do anything you asked of him for the good of the team. He's just a great kid and a great competitor."

Tom Kleber – Sophomore
800 – Norwell

Tom Kleber

This sophomore has already made three South Shore League all-star teams in five seasons of running (indoor in '01 and '02, and cross country in '01)…was edged out for the honor the last two springs by Cohasset's senior 800-meter champion Tim Baird, who edged Tom out at the SSL meet both times…Tom ran his best time ever at this spring's SSL meet (1:59.9), but Baird edged him with a meet record 1:59:12…got a little bit of revenge by beating Baird for the first time at the All-State meet with a run of 2:00.91, good for 12th place overall, which was the second best time among all sophomores in the state at the event…advanced to All-States by finishing fourth at the state Class D meet the week previous (2:00.8)…this was second year in a row he qualified for all-states…played football his freshman year, but opted to run cross country this past fall to work on his conditioning… Norwell track coach Mike Murray: "Tom obviously has a lot of natural ability and talent, and you can see he's starting to develop that work ethic he needs to push him over the top."

Bill Mulrain- Sophomore
Mile/two-mile- Silver Lake

Bill Mulrain

Mulrain emerged as a force this spring for the rebuilding SL track team, and wound up easily leading the team in points…qualified for states in the mile with his career best 4:43, but did not compete due to a paperwork mixup…also regularly competed in the 800 and 2-mile races for the Lakers, and topped out at 2:11 and 10:27 in those events, respectively…finished third in the mile at the Old Colony League meet, and was a member of the 4x800 team that finished second at this venue…the lone member of the SL squad named to the OCL All-Star team…has played JV soccer and basketball the last two years, but says he is considering becoming a full-time SL trackster (fall cross country and winter indoor track) as a junior…Silver Lake boys track coach Fred Watson: "(Assistant coach) Gary Moore really kept challenging Bill this year to step up, and he kept responding. He was setting new personal bests all the time, blowing past our expectations and I think even his own. He's going to be a force to be reckoned with the next few years."

Ben Melville - Junior
300 Hurdles/HJ - Abington

A standout in both events for Abington, Melville also qualified for both at this year's State Class D Meet…Was a South Shore League All-star and will captain the team next season…In addition to track, Melville also plays soccer and basketball at AHS…He is a member of the National Honor Society. Abington coach Bob Hayes: "Ben has worked very hard to accomplish what he has as a junior and we expect good things from him next season."

Mbela Kabongo - Senior (Capt.)
100/Triple jump - Abington

Was a top performer in the South Shore League in the 100 meters and triple jump…An SSL All-star, Kabongo qualified for the State Class D Meet in both events…In addition to track, Kabongo also played football for AHS…A captain last fall, Kabongo's work as a running back and defensive back helped Abington capture a second-place finish in the SSL football standings. Abington coach Bob Hayes: "Bela was an excellent leader and was a dedicated, hard worker. He would always rise to the occasion when we needed him to."

Cohasset 4x100 relay team
Ian Kidder- junior, Jared Krupczak- junior
Steve Laney- senior, Jason Brown- senior

After going unbeaten in South Shore League competition this spring for the first place Skippers, this group finished third at the state Class D meet (45.46 seconds) and then 15th at the All-State meet (45.17).

Norwell 4x400 relay team
Ted Hughes- senior, Tom Kleber- sophomore
Chris Coldwell- junior, Ryan Henry- sophomore

If not for an injury, this team would have likely had a strong shot at competing for a run at All-States…in one of this quartet's few opportunities to run together, it took a third place at the State coaches relays just a week prior to the Class meets with an excellent time of 3:36…only Hughes will be lost from this group to graduation. Kleber and Coldwell (the lose SSL all-star from the Norwell team) are sophomores, and Henry a junior…Norwell track coach Mike Murray: "Ah, what could have been. I think you would have seen the best from this team if they'd been able to go at the state meet. You're talking about four really top notch runners here. It's just a shame they didn't get that chance."

Honorable Mention:

Mr. Versatile, Pete Maitland

who would let him borrow a javelin for the competition.

Luckily, Maitland met up with Obi Aduba, the Medfield sensation who cruised to a Class D Championship with a remarkable throw of 197 feet. Despite his lack of familiarity with the new javelin, wet conditions on the runway and extreme exhaustion (All-States were the night after the Cohasset senior prom), Maitland threw a respectable 163 feet to close out his Skipper career.

Next year, Maitland hopes to compete in all three of his track and field events at Boston University, which he chose for a combination of athletics and academics. Maitland was leaning toward BU anyway, having a desire to major in engineering, but talking to the school's track coach really helped him nail the decision down. Maitland turned down acceptances to the University of Rhode Island and UMass-Amherst in deference to both educational and potential athletic opportunities both with the Terrier tracksters and the BU soccer team.

As a sophomore and junior, Maitland led the backline of the soccer team's defense as a very fast and agile sweeper with excellent reflexes. As a senior, he dominated the backfield, leading the team to the sectional quarterfinals for the third year in a row. For the second year, he was an easy decision for the SSL coaches to make when they selected their All-Star teams.

Maitland made an even longer leap from his junior year to his senior year in the winter, one that would have had Bob Beamon scratching his head. Maitland was a second stringer, a JV swing guard who saw limited varsity minutes as an 11th grader.

But, as a senior, after being named a tri-captain, Maitland emerged as a starter who was first on the team in rebounds and three-point percentage, and second on the team in points, assists, and steals. Maitland was one of two seniors from Cohasset, along with co-captain Matt Bilodeau (who also was named to the soccer All-Star team with Maitland), to be named to the elite SSL versus Patriot League All-Star basketball game.

Even off the field/court/track, Maitland excelled. He was one of five Cohasset singers to be named to the Southeast Massachusetts District Chorus.

Despite all his achievements, the ever-humble Maitland could only manage a frustrated sentence or two about not repeating his trip to New Englands when asked about a look-back on his four tremendous years.

Still, he mentioned, he was very grateful for the time he had at Cohasset High School, as grateful as the Skipper faithful were to have him on our side.

"To all my teammates who will still be here when I'm gone," began the future Terrier, "just work hard and try as hard as you can because it will be over before you know it."

game in more than a week. Ditto for cleanup hitter Ted Straughn. Both players were in Kentucky working as volunteers in the Apalachia Project. A third Post 118 player, Paul Demahowski, was also on the trip and is still away.

Leadoff hitter and center fielder Greg Levin has likewise been away for over a week, vacationing with his family in Australia, and catcher/first baseman Brian Signorelli has been sidelined by a sprained ankle.

Manager Ralph Berry has also been out of town the last two weeks.

Arnold does not want to use these absences as excuses, however, insisting his team still has enough talent to compete with most of the teams in the District.

"The kids we have here are capable of playing much better than they have," said the coach. "That's the bottom line."

The coach hasn't had much in the way of specifics (i.e. names or numbers) to add to his game reports of late.

The most upbeat thing he has to say is there is still time to turn things around. There are 10 games remaining in the season, and he still believes, as alluded on top, that his team can rip off six in a row just as easily as it has dropped the last six to get back in the playoff hunt.

"It's frustrating right now," Arnold sums up. "We're not hitting the way we can. The defense has been awful and we've had problems with our pitching rotation. If we can get one of those things straightened out, maybe it will start to turn the tide. It wouldn't surprise me at all to see that happen."

Red Cross golf tourney set for July 22

The 17th Annual American Red Cross Golf Classic, to be held at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham on July 22 will seek participation from golfers and non-golfers alike in its aim to make this year's event the most successful yet.

Cohasset swimmers scuttle Duxbury Aqua Dux in opener

By Eileen McBride
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Once again Cohasset Swim Team got off to a great start, opening its season on June 28 with a substantial win over the visiting Duxbury Aqua Dux. Under rather ominous skies, the home team turned out in strength to end the day with more than a 300 point margin over their rivals (Cohasset 459, Duxbury 100).

The afternoon began with the 100 yard medleys and, the eight and under boys and girls swam unchallenged to take first, second and third places in each of their races (boys, 8 and under, 100 yards medley relay: 1st: Salerno; Faber; Mahoney; Durkin. 2nd: Culhane; McCarthy, M.; MacCormack, Murphy. 3rd: Berube; Kennedy; Kissick; McCarthy, R.; girls, 8 and under, 100 yards medley relay: 1st: Kissick, Seraikas, Farren, Donohue. 2nd: Haber; Farren, N.; Berube; Buckley. 3rd: McCunney, Gibbons; Carrier, Teague).

The ten and under boys matched their younger teammates with first, second and third place finishes (1st: Doonan: Porter; Kissick; Carrier; 2nd: Queenan, Yeager, Shipp; Ofsthun; 3rd: Murphy; Buckley; Durkin; Plante) and the girls were close behind, just missing the win, but taking second and third places (2nd: Culhane; Teague; Musto; Murphy; 3rd: Regan; Donohue; McBride; Dickinson).

The twelve and under boys again swam unchallenged into first, second and third places (1st: Doonan; Drybanski; Cunningham; Hunt; 2nd: Porter; Shipp; Ulmer; Hurley; 3rd: Daly; DeGiacomo; Kuppens; McCarthy, E.) and the girls followed suit with first, second and third place finishes (1st: Hernan; Fortin, Mahoney; Meehan; 2nd: Teague; Coggins; Sacks; Lehr; 3rd: McCarthy, M.; Hurd; Dunn; Anderson).

The medleys finished with wins for both the girls and boys leaving Cohasset with 60 points to Duxbury's 20 (boys: 1st: Blackburn; Roach; Conway, Faber; girls: 1st: Daley; Anderson; Durkin; O'Brien; 2nd: Englander; Swain; Musto; Previte; 3rd: Plante; Lieb-Lappen; Ogrodnik; Richardson).

Performances in the fifty frees kept up the pace with a win for the ten and under boys and girls (boys: 1st: Kissick, J.; 2nd: Durkin, T.; 3rd: Carrier, J.; girls: 1st: Lehr, V.; 5th: Zappolo, C.; 6th: Musto, E.). The twelve and under boys started strong but were edged out of first place literally by a split second to finish second, third and fourth (2nd: Hunt, A.; 3rd: Shipp, A.; 4th: Hurley, P.). The girls took first place in their heat, missed second but claimed third and fourth positions (1st: Hernan, E.; 3rd: Lehr, S.; Baumgarten, E.).

At the fourteen and under level, both boys and girls again produced a win and the seventeen and unders continued the effort, with unchallenged first place finishes to take Cohasset ahead a further twenty points (boys, fourteen and under: 1st: Conway, C.; girls, fourteen and under: 1st: Daley, M.; 3rd: Harrington, K.; 4th: Lieb-Lappen, M.; boys, seventeen and under: 1st: Tehranian, K., girls, seventeen and under: 1st: O'Brien, K.; 2nd: Harrington, B.).

In the 25 yard freestyle the eight and under boys got off to a great start with first, second and third place finishes (1st: Durkin, J.; 2nd: Mahoney, R.; 3rd: Kissick, C.). And the girls were close behind with second, third and fifth places (2nd: Donohue, M.; 3rd: Farren, A.; 5th: Seraikas, A.). The ten and unders kept the pace with an unchallenged win for the boys and a successful shut out for the girls (boys: 1st: Doonan, B.; 2nd: Porter, L.; 3rd: Buckley, T.; girls: 1st: Michalowski, A.; 2nd: Karski, E.; Culhane, C.).

In the 50 yard event the twelve and under boys were denied a win but came up with second, third and fourth places (2nd: Drybanski, J.; 3rd: Cunningham, C.; 4th: Ulmer, W.), while the girls, once again, swept the board (1st: Meehan, S.; 2nd: Teague, M.; 3rd: Mahoney, C.). The fourteen and under boys and girls claimed two further first place finishes (boys: 1st: Conway, C.; 3rd: Gammon, B.; 4th: Faber, C.; girls: 1st: Durkin, L.; 2nd Musto, L.; 3rd: Previte, M.) and the event rounded off with unchallenged seventeen and under races (1st: McCarthy, D.; 2nd: Flynn, C.; 3rd: Blackburn, C.; girls: 1st: O'Brien, K.; 2nd: Anderson, C.; 3rd: Ogrodnik, M). Cohasset now led Duxbury by 121 points.

The home team continued to dominate in the butterfly event, winning all but the boys, twelve and under race. In the eight and under and ten and under events, the boys raced unopposed, and the girls placed first in both their races (boys, eight and under: 1st: Mahoney, R.; 2nd: MacCormack, P.; 3rd: Kissick, C.; girls, eight and under: 1st: Kissick, H.; 3rd: Berube, M.; 5th: Haber, A.; boys, ten and under: 1st: Kissick, J.; 2nd: Durkin, T.; 3rd: Shipp, M.; girls, ten and under: 1st: Lehr, V.; 2nd: Mahoney, M.; boys, twelve and under: 2nd: Doonan, P.; 3rd: Cunningham, C.; 4th Kuppens, C.; girls, twelve and under: 1st: Sacks, M.; 2nd: Mahoney, C.; 3rd: Campbell, A.;).

In the 50 yard butterfly, Duxbury were unable to field swimmers, so Cohasset raced unopposed once again (boys fourteen and under: 1st: Conway, C.; girls, fourteen and under: 1st: Daley, M.; 2nd: Englander, E.; 3rd: Shea, E.; boys, seventeen and under, 1st: Flynn, C.; girls, seventeen and under: 1st: O.Brien, K.; 2nd: Ogrodnik, M.; 3rd: Previte, M.). The event finished with Cohasset 179 points ahead of the visitors.

The breaststroke was up next and Cohasset's youngest swimmers put in a series of excellent performances to win all four of the 25 yard events (boys, eight and under: 1st: McCarthy, M.; 2nd: Culhane, E.J.; 3rd: Faber, J.; girls, eight and under: 1st: Haber, A.; 2nd: Seraikas, A.; 3rd: Berube, M.; boys, ten and under: 1st: Porter, L.; 2nd: Yeager, J.; 3rd: Shipp, M.; girls, ten and under: 1st: Michalowski, A.; 3rd: Zappolo, C.; 5th: Teague, K.).

In the 50 yard heats Cohasset won each of their six events, although the twelve and under and seventeen and under boys swam unopposed (boys, twelve and under: 1st: Hunt, A.; 2nd: Ulmer, W.; 3rd: Shipp, A.; girls, twelve and under: 1st: Lehr, S.; 2nd: Fortin, S.; 6th: Coggins, S.; boys, fourteen and under: 1st: Zappolo, N.; 3rd: Gammon, B.; 4th: Faber, C.; girls, fourteen and under: 1st: Durkin, L.; 2nd: Swain, K.; 3rd: Shea, E.; boys, seventeen and under: 1st: Roach, K.; 2nd: Blackburn, C.; girls, seventeen and under: 1st Anderson, C.; 2nd: Whoriskey, K.; 3rd: Lieb-Lappen, M.).

In the backstroke Cohasset continued to put in excellent performances, with or without competition. The eight and under boys worked hard to take first, second and fourth places in their event (1st: Salerno, J.; 2nd: MacCormack, D.; 4th: Culhane, E.J.). The eight and under girls and ten and under boys competed alone, while the ten and under girls had some competition but still managed to chock up another win (girls, eight and under: 1st: Kissick, H.; 2nd: Farren, A.; 3rd: Donohue, M.; boys, ten and under: 1st: Doonan, B.; 2nd: Carrier, J.; 3rd: Queenan, C.; girls, ten and under: 1st: Mahoney, M.; 4th: Culhane, C.; 6th: Murphy, O.). The twelve and under boys again went unopposed but the girls had some competition and still managed to secure first, second and third places (boys: 1st: Doonan, P.; 2nd: Drybanski, J.; 3rd: Porter, N., girls: 1st: Hernan, E.; 2nd: Meehan, S.; 3rd: Teague, M.).

In the 50 yard event only the twelve and under and fourteen and under girls had some competition and in both groups the Cohasset girls took the three top slots (girls, twelve and under: 1st: Hernan, E.; 2nd: Meehan, S.; 3rd: Teague, M.; girls, fourteen and under: 1st Daley, M.; 2nd: Englander, E.; 3rd: Musto, L.). The twelve and under boys, the fourteen and under boys and the girls and boys in the seventeen and under age group, threw themselves into some healthy competition with their team mates and turned in a series of great performances (boys, twelve and under: 1st: Doonan, P.; 2nd Drybanski, J.; 3rd: Porter, N.; boys, fourteen and under: 1st: Zappolo, N.; boys, seventeen and under: 1st: Tehranian, K.; 2nd: McCarthy, D.; girls, seventeen and under: 1st: Harrington, B.; 2nd: Harrington, K.).

In the last event of the afternoon, the 100 yard free relays continued the pattern of the individual events, with gaps in the competition in three out of six races. The ten and under boys and girls and the twelve and under girls had some opposition and still managed to claim first place in each of their races, producing six out of six wins for the home team (boys, eight and under: 1st: Mahoney; Kissick; Durkin; Salerno; 2nd: Culhane; Kennedy; Murphy, McCarthy, M.; 3rd; Faber.; McCarthy, R,; Berube; MacCormack; girls, eight and under: 1st: Farren, A.; Donohue; Seraikas; Kissick; 2nd: Buckley, Carrier, Gibbons, Berube; 3rd: Bodner, Farren, V.; Axelson, Caron; boys, ten and under: 1st: Doonan; Porter; Carrier; Kissick; 2nd: Buckley; Murphy; Ofsthun; Queenan; 3rd: Durkin, J.; MacCormack, Leahy, Whitney; girls, ten and under: 1st: Michalowski, Mahoney, Karski, Lehr; 4th: Regan; Kucinski, Donohue, Axelson; 5th: Adkins, Gaumer, Fortin, Kelly, K.; boys, twelve and under: 1st: Drybanski; Doonan; Ulmer; Hunt; 2nd: Hurley; Porter; Shipp; Cunningham; 3rd: Connors; Daly; DeGiacomo, Yeager; girls, twelve and under: 1st: Meehan; Mahoney; Lehr; Hernan; 2nd: Buckley; Foley; McElhinny; McCarthy, C.; 4th: Gaumer; Kearns; Masotta, Salerno).

The meet ended with the 200 yard free relay and, reflecting the pattern of the afternoon, the seventeen and girls swam against the visitors, while the boys swam alone. Cohasset secured two final victories and the meet was over (boys: 1st: Flynn, McCarthy, Zappolo, Tehranian; 2nd: Blackburn; Faber; Gammon; Roach; girls: 1st: Anderson, Previte, Harrington, K.; Durkin; 2nd: Shea; Ogrodnik; Whoriskey; Harrington, B.; 3rd: Daly; Guinee; James; Plante).

Congratulations to the Cohasset squad for a wonderful start to the 2002 season - and congratulations to Duxbury for a great effort against formidable odds. The imbalance in squad size was clearly a serious disadvantage. Cohasset's victory once again reflects the consistently high quality performances that have become the team's hallmark. It also underlines the importance of building the level of commitment that brings swimmers back year after year. Congratulations to Alison Ryan and Ted Hughes on their first win of the season. We're all looking forward to another strong season from this impressive squad. Well done Cohasset!

Royals wear AL crown

Seksay unloaded on a pitch and drove the ball towards the right-center field gap. The ball had base hit and RBI written all over it when Royals centerfielder Chase Stebbins came sliding across the outfield to make a tremendous shoestring catch to win the championship for the Royals.

The Royals road to the championship was marked by a stellar regular season record of 11-2, with the two losses coming at the hands of a skilled Angels team. The Royals/Angels rivalry has highlighted in a playoff semi-final game on June 15th, when the Royals prevailed in an exciting 2-1 extra inning victory.

The Royals season was testament to overall team baseball. The team had outstanding veteran leadership and play from its fifth-graders, Adam Berger, Nick Savage, and Andrew Bell.

In addition, the 4th grade contingent of Jeff Charles, Chase Stebbins and Paul Guinee provided numerous contributions to the team's success throughout the season. The third graders were instrumental in securing the championship and offer a bright future for the Royals. Ben Campbell, Jack Carrier, Luke Ernst, Andrew Fewsmith, P.J. Pergola, Colin Tarpey and Sam Richardson were all key actors to the teams overall success.

Special recognition goes to the coaching staff for the Royals. Aaron Berger, Joe Campbell and Bob Stebbins provided the squad with solid baseball teaching and leadership, but most importantly, demonstrated through their words and actions, solid sportsmanship. The loyal Royal fans would like to acknowledge their appreciation for the coaches' efforts.

Near miss for Noering

Cohasset man barely misses putt for $10,000

After a grueling three days of play in the Ross Cup International at Cohasset Country Club, held June 20-23, Dick Noering still had not had enough golf. Earlier in the tournament, Dick had hit the green on hole 15 to enter him in to an elite group out of which only one would be chosen to putt on 18 for $10,000.

When Dick hit the green, the winds was blowing at approximately 60 miles per hour. His caddy said "most people wouldn't even attempt to eat a donut in this kind of weather."

When the time came for the putting contest, Dick looked for some advice, but his wife, son and partner were nowhere to be found So he reportedly called the Dali Lama, who gave him words of encouragement.

Approximately 40 of the 144 players in the tournament qualified for the contest. After a process of elimination. Dick was the only one left on 18. He was surrounded by a crowd as he lined up a 60-foot putt, which missed by only a few feet.

Dick was handed a check for $200 by the club pro, George Dietz, who said : "We all knew Dick was a great player,. He just never showed it before."

POLICE BRIEFS

Teens arrested after 'boat stop'

Police have charged three Cohasset teenagers, who just graduated from the high school, with minor transport alcohol following a "boat stop" by the harbormaster Friday night.

Police said the harbormaster stopped a boat being driven by Sean Chase, 19, of 17 Highland Court, because it was operating without "running lights."

Further investigation found that Chase and his two passengers, Paul R. Previte, 18, of 38 Summer St., and Kyle S. Weber, 18, of 20 Oak St., were in possession of alcohol.

Chase was also charged with operating a motorboat without having his running lights on.

The teens were arraigned on the charges Monday in Quincy District Court. Police prosecutor Rick Grassie said the charges of minor in possession were continued without a finding for six months, meaning if the teens stay out of trouble the charges will be dismissed at that time. The teens are also required to pay a $50 fee to MADD and attend a four-hour alcohol and drug awareness program.

Chase was found "not responsible" on the boat running lights charge, Grassie said, meaning that charge was dropped.

Burglaries are being investigated

Police are still investigating two village burglaries that were reported early Saturday morning (June 22).

An undetermined amount of cash was taken from Cohasset Hardware on South Main Street and Grape Vine Caterers on Stagecoach Way. The thief or thieves broke a window to get in, Police Chief Robert Jackson said. No merchandise was taken, he said.

Anyone with information should call Det. Garrett Hunt at 781-383-1055.

Police recover stolen property

Cohasset police have charged a Plymouth man with selling stolen property to a Brockton pawnshop.

The construction-related equipment was stolen in two houses break in Cohasset, according to police Det. Garrett Hunt. Daron Gaeta, 35, of 22 Stagecoach Circle, Plymouth allegedly sold the stolen items to the pawnshop. The houses, which are under construction, were not occupied at the time of the burglaries, Hunt said.

He said the owner of the stolen property called the pawn shop because he needed to replace his items, but after hearing the description, realized the items offered for sale might be his.

After further investigation police were able to obtain a warrant and arrested Gaeta on June 27. He was charged with three counts of receiving stolen property over $250; and one count of receiving stolen property under $250. The property recovered is worth more than $2,000, Hunt said.

Gaeta was arraigned on the charges in Quincy District Court and is due to return to court Aug. 13. Although Gaeta is suspected of also committing the breaks, he hasn't been charged with that at this time. The break-ins are still under investigation, Hunt said.

Garden getaway

Science center hosts annual 'Through the Garden Gate' tour

By Diana Goldman
CORRESPONDENT

Summertime is gardening season.

For many of us this means digging in and working in our own gardens, while for others it simply means admiring the dazzling array of sights and scents of the many spectacular gardens on the South Shore.

Whether you are a gardener or just wish you had a green thumb, you won't want to miss the South Shore Natural Science Center's 21st annual "Through the Garden Gate Tour featuring eight of the most spectacular gardens in the towns of Scituate, Cohasset, Norwell and Hanson. This year's tour steps off Wednesday, July 10. Visitors may tour the gardens from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.

The science center will furnish tour-goers with a detailed description of all of the gardens on the tour along with directions to each location. There will be a hostess and a tour guide at each garden and the owners of the gardens have also placed labels on the different plants to help guide the way.

The popular annual event is a great way for garden lovers to learn about new plants and arrangements, and it can be a good way to get some new ideas for your own garden in coming seasons.

The tour includes a variety of large and small gardens, because not everyone has a large property to plant on, notes the science center's director of public relations, Joan Reid.

"The garden tour is a perennial favorite of people in this region because of its reputation for fantastic gardens. People really look forward to it." said Reid.

Some of the spectacular sites awaiting Through the Garden Gate tour-goers July 10.

Without giving too much away, Reid said this year's event features a wide array of gardens from seaside varieties to gardens with more hardy, woody plants. Each garden has distinct qualities with unique plants. One garden on the tour includes more than 1,200 different species of plants, while another includes a rock garden and a rose garden that contains 67 shrub and hybrid varieties.

Another attraction on the tour is at the science center itself, which serves as a midpoint for the day's tours. At the center, viewers will see butterfly, herb, wildflower and raised sensory gardens. The center is an air-conditioned facility and will be serving cool lemonade and cookies as well.

Serving the entire South Shore, the Norwell-based, non-profit environmental education center is celebrating its 40th anniversary this year. All of the proceeds from the "Through the Garden Gate" tour will go towards the educational programming at the center. The center offers nature classes throughout the year for students at the pre-school level to the adult level. There is a preschool on the center's site and a summer day camp.

If purchased in advance tickets are $15 for the tour, and $25 for the tour with a box lunch. On the day of the tour tickets are $22.

For tickets or more information you can call the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell, at (781) 659-2559 or visit their Web site at www.ssnsc.org.

'Days of Our Lives' stars on stage at Music Circus' Soap Opera Festival

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Actor Matt Cedeno knows firsthand that soap opera fans are a breed apart. In his four years as Brandon Walker on NBC-TV's top-rated daytime drama, "Days Of Our Lives," Cedeno has seen the viewer's devotion to their favorite characters and storylines up close thanks not only to large volumes of fan mail, but also to the reaction he and his fellow actors elicit at personal appearances.

Days of Our Lives star Matt Cedeno will serve as master of ceremonies at the July 6 Soap Opera Festival at the South Shore Music Circus.

"It is a real kick to appear live before the fans," Cedeno explained in a telephone interview last week from his Burbank dressing room. "You feel like you're in a boy band."

On July 6, Cedeno will have more reason to empathize with The Back Street Boys, when he joins four of his castmates for a "Days Of Our Lives" Soap Opera Festival at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset. Drake Hogestyn ("John Black"), Peter Reckell ("Bo Brady"), Alison Sweeney ("Sami Brady"), Jason Cook ("Shawn-Douglas Brady") will join Master of Ceremonies Cedeno for a behind the scenes look at the long-running soap. The actors will also take questions from the audience.

One subject that may come up for leading man Cedeno is his inclusion in this year's People Magazine list of "The 50 Most Beautiful People." In its May 13, 2002 edition, the weekly magazine posed the question: "Why is it that women turn to Jell-O when Matt Cedeno loses his shirt?" The publication turned to one of the actor's castmates for an explanation.

"That body is pure muscle," said his "Days" co-star Renee Jones. "One day Matt had been washing his face, and his shirt was off. I told him, 'I'm sorry, but I can't rehearse. Please put your shirt on so I can focus.'"

Cedeno, 27, takes the all the attention in stride. A native of Moses Lake, Washington, and the son of African-Cuban and Irish-American parents, Cedeno was a high school football star. When an injury ended his professional football hopes, Cedeno turned to modeling. By age 21, he was working for Versace.

"The People Magazine coverage was great publicity for me. It was very cool and, of course, very flattering," Cedeno admits. "My fellow cast members kid me a lot about it, but that's okay, too."

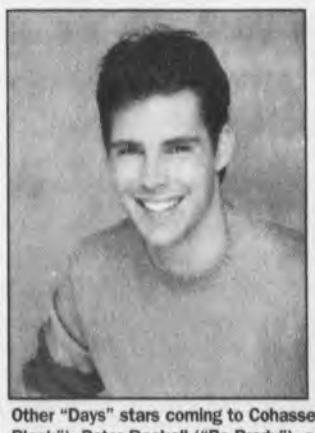
In addition to the soap, Cedeno's credits include appearances in the feature films "The Price of Glory," with Jimmy Smits, and "The Suburbans," with Ben Stiller and Jennifer Love Hewitt. While many young actors depart daytime at the first whiff of fame, Cedeno has no such immediate plans.

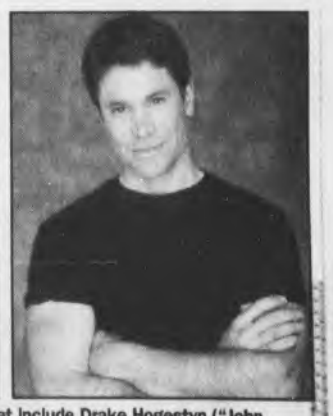
"I love the show and I really enjoy my co-workers. In daytime television, everything moves at a very quick pace. You handle a lot of material in just one day's taping. It is a pretty intense experience for an actor, but it is also excellent training."

It is also a good way for an actor to build a loyal fan following. To that end, Cedeno promises "Days" viewers a lot to watch for this summer.

"My character, Brandon, is a young man with a troubled past. He grew up in a very abusive home and has come to town to find his real father. Brandon can be very volatile when provoked. Viewers can expect almost equal doses of both vengeance and romance from me in the months ahead. Brandon faults Abe Carver for his troubled childhood and really believes that Abe is evil. To get back at him, Brandon will romance Abe's estranged wife, Lexie, while also still pursuing Sami. With all he has going on, Brandon will be a very busy man."

(Matt Cedeno will appear in the "Days Of Our Lives" Soap Opera Festival on July 6 at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier Street, Cohasset. For tickets and information, call 781-383-1400.)





Other "Days" stars coming to Cohasset include Drake Hogestyn ("John Black"), Peter Reckell ("Bo Brady"), and Jason Cook ("Shawn-Douglas Brady").

The Dangerous Lives of Altar Boys (B+)

Take your mind off the headlines and relax: This has nothing to do with clerics who let their fingers do the stalking. And injustice-collecting paranoids take a deep breath: The only priest here is a nice guy, albeit a smoker (call in the Purity Police). This isn't about abuse of kids by clergymen, but, rather, about spunky boys with more brains than common sense impressing one another, one getting his first girl friend and a great deal more anguish than he ever expected, and a reiteration of that hard-learned lesson: Actions have consequences. There's sexual abuse here, but it's where in reality it mainly is: smack dab midst the family.

Based on a semi-autobiographical story by the late Chris Fuhrman, this is situated in the 1970s in Savannah, though nobody has an inkling of what Georgians sound like and the place looks like Anywhere, USA, a misstep in a movie that has only one other, its melodramatic climax. Gratifyingly written with the care found on TV of late only in the much lamented (and swiftly canceled) "Freaks and Geeks," the film's boys talk the way boys talk, no "Dawson's Creek" precociousness, no beyond-their-years philosophizing. Its lead performances — Emile Hirsch as Francis, the follower and romantic; Kieran Culkin (you-know-who's bro) as Tim, the disaffected, bored to tedium impresario of his pals' pranks — are faultless; these are cute but not gorgeous boys, gawky, not sleek, not knowing, who react as we did when we were 14.

The film juxtaposes live-action with well-drawn comic book animation reflecting on the film's doings, elaborating on the fearsome (but not evil) headmistress, one-legged, thin-lipped Sister Assumpta (Jodie Foster, who also produced), and on the priest-coach, Father Casey (Vincent D'Onofrio), apotheosizing the lovely

Pasta and shrimp

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

For many of us, the challenge is coming up with yet another simple pasta dish that is interesting and worthy of a substantial main course. Shrimp immediately comes to mind since pasta and seafood are a classic combination. The problem is that most pasta/shrimp dishes end up with rubbery, overcooked shrimp, a dull sauce, and pasta that serves as nothing more than a flavorless bed of starch.

The first step was to decide how to cook the shrimp. Poaching was the clear winner in my tests since it had more flavor than boiling and one could control the cooking time more easily than when sautéing. In fact, I found that poaching the shrimp off the heat in a hot liquid was the best method. It takes about 6 minutes and it is easy to pinpoint the exact moment when the shrimp is done since they cook slowly. Next, I wondered what type of poaching liquid would be best.

Since I had shells from the shrimp (jumbo 16/20 size shrimp are easiest to shell quickly since there are so few of them), I made a quick stock with 2 cups of water, the shells, and 20 minutes of simmering. I then discarded the shells and added a few flavoring ingredients — wine, bay, shallot, parsley, tarragon and peppercorns – simmered the liquid another 2 minutes, and popped the shrimp into the pot off the heat for a gentle poach. Now I had juicy, well-flavored shrimp but, borrowing a technique from Marcella Hazan, I then placed the hot, poached shrimp into a 1/4 cup of high quality olive oil. The oil absorbed the flavors of the shrimp, making this dish even more deeply flavored. Finally, thinking that the poaching liquid would also work well as a sauce, I strained it and reserved it for later use.

For the sauce, I started with olive oil and garlic. (I also tested onion and shallot but the garlic won hands down.) Four cloves were cooked until blond-colored, a step that tempered their harsh bite. Next, I added two cups of the reduced broth and cooked it until it was reduced about half—a few minutes. Now the dish came together quickly. I added the pasta which had been cooked to within 2 minutes of al dente. (This way it soaks up the garlicky shrimp broth and each strand of spaghetti is nicely flavored.) To finish the dish, I added the shrimp and olive oil mixture and a healthy dose of fresh herbs and toasted pine nuts. As for the herbs I tried basil, parsley, tarragon and arugula and settled on basil. I tried tossing in a couple of chopped ripe tomatoes but their bright acidity didn't work. I tried adding a pinch of red pepper but the dish lost many of its delicate undertones.

SPAGHETTI WITH SHRIMP, BASIL, AND PINE NUTS

Use jumbo shrimp which are called 16/20s since there are 16 to 20 of them per pound. This will save a lot of time peeling although they are more expensive. Once shelled, the shrimp should be cut in half crosswise so that they are half as thick and therefore quicker cooking.

For The Shrimp

1 pound extra large shrimp, peeled, deveined, and cut in half crosswise, shells reserved
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup dry white wine
1 small bay leaf
1 shallot, quartered
2 sprigs parsley
1 sprig tarragon
2-3 peppercorns
1/4 cup best quality extra-virgin olive oil

For The Sauce and Pasta

3 tablespoons pine nuts
2 tablespoons olive oil
4 cloves garlic, minced or pressed
2 cups reserved shrimp stock
1 pound spaghetti
1 recipe shrimp steeped in olive oil
1/2 cup thinly sliced basil leaves

1. Bring the reserved shells, two cups water, and salt to a boil in a medium saucepan over high heat. Reduce heat to maintain simmer, cover, and cook for 20 minutes. Strain, pressing on the shells to extract all liquid.

2. Return the shrimp stock to the pan and add the wine, bay leaf, shallot, parsley, tarragon and peppercorns. Place over high heat and boil for two minutes. Extinguish the heat and stir in the shrimp. Steep for six minutes. Strain, reserving liquid. Pick the shrimp clean of herbs and spices and place in a small bowl. Add the olive oil, stir to coat the shrimp and loosely cover. Let sit at least fifteen minutes or up to an hour. Alternatively this step may be done ahead and the shrimp refrigerated for several hours or overnight but should be allowed to sit out about fifteen minutes before combining them in the finished dish.

3. Place a large skillet over medium heat. Add the pine nuts and toast until golden brown, about two to three minutes, shaking the pan frequently to promote even browning. Remove nuts and set aside. Place the olive oil in the pan and swirl to evenly coat the bottom of the pan. Add the garlic and cook until very fragrant and slightly blond. Increase heat to high and add the shrimp stock. Boil for about 3 minutes or until the mixture is reduced by half. Meanwhile place a large pot of salted water over high heat. When boiling add the spaghetti and cook to within two minutes of the al dente package directions.

2. Drain the pasta and add it to the skillet. (If your skillet is not large enough to hold the spaghetti you may add the reduced stock and spaghetti back into the now empty pasta cooking pot.) Cook over medium low heat until most of the liquid has been absorbed by the spaghetti. Add the shrimp (including the oil) and basil and toss until heated through and evenly distributed. Serve immediately sprinkled with the toasted pine nuts.

girl (Jena Malone) Francis yearns for and who has a terrible secret she bears with great pain.

Some delinquency arises out of stupid kids' inability to cope; others, like here, come from bright kids' need to show off, often with disastrous results. The movie is comic, shrewd and wise about clever kids, irreverent but not cruel about churchly authority figures — Sister Assumpta is Miss Tough-Love, yes, but she has these youths' souls to fret about — scrupulous about getting most details right on the money, and insightful in showing that while kids may seem to take in stride the turmoil in their families, they churn inside and act out in ways that appear to have little to do with what ails them. This film will, I think, satisfy thoughtful child experts in its presentation of characterizations and motivations.

I can't speak for girls but for guys this is an exercise in memory reawakening: We get, at least I got, flashbacks to mid-teenage bumbling, goofing off, elaborate plotting and merciless baiting of our pals about their non-existent sex lives, their dorkiness, our coolness. If you can handle another bit of "Tyger! Tyger! burning bright" (William Blake lives here) and aren't going to weep too sloppily when things go very sour, you'll find this honest, modest, sobering film rewarding. You'll love these boys, admire the clerical figures and think about it after it's over.

A potpourri of garden treasures

Green thumbs up

Sensational new sun lovers

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As summertime gets underway, many gardeners settle into the weed, water and maintenance mode for their backyard plots. The spring planting season has passed and thoughts turn to family vacations and other recreational activities. During the next few months, many are content to relax and enjoy the fruits of their springtime labor. For the plantaholic, however, a week without a visit to a nursery is sheer torture. I have been accused of never meeting a plant I didn't like and I have been known to comment that nearly every plant is "my favorite". As a compulsive collector, I have made it my mission to grow one of every perennial on the market. Many containers of recent acquisitions line my back walkway; still others await discovery.

Summer visits to our local garden centers often reveal unexpected treasures. While many perennial gardens feature predominantly spring bloom, July is the highpoint of my blooming season. Daylilies are the primary players but many companion plants add a diversity of bloom. Numerous new summer-blooming plants have made their way into my gardens during the past two seasons. A few died or barely survived, others were disappointing and some were even better than advertised.

One of the most promising new perennials on the market this season, Coreopsis 'Limerock Ruby', was developed in nearby Rhode Island. Released this year as a new "Blooms of Bressingham" introduction, this coreopsis boasts fine-textured foliage similar in appearance to the fabulous, extended blooming Coreopsis 'Moonbeam". Dozens of 1-1/2-inch, ruby red, daisy-like flowers are reported to bloom all summer long above the 20-inch foliage.

Last season, the Blooms of Bressingham introduced Coreopsis 'Sweet Dreams'. This new gem features delicate threadleaf foliage and unique, little daisies blushed deep pink and highlighted by deep rosy purple centers. It took weeks for me to find it a home but it was eventually planted alongside a tall garden phlox that demonstrated similar color tones of the central blotch. I find all the threadleaf-types of coreopsis perform best when provided with a sunny locale and consistent moisture. During the latter half of the summer, a light shearing of these plants will encourage another flourish of bloom.

The perennial geraniums are a charming, diverse family of hardy perennials that provide an extended season of bloom, terrific foliage and delightful single or double blossoms. High on my list of favorite new perennials is Geranium 'Rozanne', another Blooms' offering. It has been a terrific performer since I planted it last season. Attractive lobed leaves are slightly marbled and looked great all summer. Similar to many of the larger-leafed perennial geraniums, the flowering stems gradually elongate over the season giving the appearance of knitting surrounding companion plants together. Beginning in June, dozens of saucer-shaped blossoms are produced above an expanding 20-inch mound. The pleasing, 2-inch flowers continue until frost appearing deep blue with white centers during the cooler times of the day and fading to a paler shade of lavender when exposed to full sun and midday heat. I was so enchanted with the plant's long bloom season, its habit and charming flowers, that I added half a dozen new plants at season's end to accent the front edge of gardens devoted primarily to daylily cultivars.

Several other new geraniums have found their way into my garden in recent seasons and seem to thrive in my moisture-retentive soils. Geranium phaeum 'Samobor' exhibits clusters of small, burgundy-tinted flowers on 2-foot stems but its most outstanding feature is its unique foliage that displays striking burgundy patches.It is planted alongside Heuchera 'Plum Pudding' to accentuate its handsome coloring. Another new favorite is Geranium pratense 'Midnight Reiter' with sensational, deep purple foliage topped by lilac-colored blossoms. Planted in a sunny spot along the front of a predominantly shady border, companion plants include dusty miller and Japanese painted ferns.

For color during the latter half of the summer, few perennials rival the tall garden phloxes. In recent years, hybridization has produced cultivars that demonstrate greater resistance to mildew, impressive flower heads with exceptionally large pips and several varieties with sensational variegated leaves. Phlox 'Norah Leigh' was added to my borders many years ago when it first became available. Heavily variegated green and white leaves have never shown evidence of mildew and the softly tinted lavender-pink flowers are a pleasant complement to the foliage. My latest love affair is for Phlox 'Becky Towe', a spectacular new introduction described in one catalog as offering "broad golden leaf edges which pale to butter-cream at flowering time" topped by "sweetly scented salmon-carmine rose flowers with a darker magenta eye." I could not possibly describe it any better except to add that the emerging foliage has sunset tones and every aspect of the plant since last season has been a winner.

Visit your local nurseries this month to find summer-blooming treasures. To witness these beauties and view the splendor of daylilies and their companions during their peak bloom this month, I welcome you to tour my gardens on Brookwood Rd. in Hanover. I am open to the public throughout the month of July, dawn to dusk. Although the gardens have been somewhat neglected this season after hosting a national convention last year, visitors are always welcome to view the weeds and our vast collection of perennials.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JULY 3

The combination of a Mars/Jupiter alignment and Aries moon makes for a fast-paced day. If you are working, be sure to have a clear plan of action. You can be most productive. If you are vacationing, this is a great day to enjoy favorite sports or spend extra time exercising. The moon forms challenging contacts to Mars and Jupiter this afternoon, warning you to slow down. Don't overdo or take risks.

THURSDAY, JULY 4

The Aries moon forms its final contact to a planet at 1:11 a.m. and becomes inactive. A Taurus moon takes over at 4:16 a.m., generating a relaxed mood. This a wonderful day to gather with friends and enjoy life to the fullest.

FRIDAY, JULY 5

Planetary influences continue to rate high across the board. The Taurus moon highlights social and romantic activities. An applying alignment of Mercury and Uranus stimulates thinking and communication. This is a great time for promoting new ideas, announcing intentions. New starts in your business or personal life are recommended.

SATURDAY, JULY 6

The morning continues to rate high for communications of all kinds. Send letters, e-mails, packages. Creative projects also get the green light, especially writing. Mercury aligns with Uranus at 9:41 a.m. The moon aligns with Uranus at 11:57 a.m. and becomes inactive. Fun and games are back in the picture at 3:01 p.m., when the moon enters lively Gemini. Gather with friends and let the good times roll.

SUNDAY, JULY 7

Mercury enters the sign Cancer at 6:35 a.m., remaining there until July 21. The Gemini moon makes this day prime for parties, picnics, family gatherings. Put domestic or career worries on the back burner; enjoy favorite sports, hobbies, friends. There is a rough spot in effect between 6:09-9:09 p.m., when the moon opposes Pluto. Slow down and think before you say or do something you will later regret.

MONDAY, JULY 8

A lunar alignment to Saturn can make for a difficult morning. Allow extra time to get where you are going. Don't get caught up in worries, self-doubts, fears. Storm clouds move out midday. The afternoon and evening rate high for vacationing, partying, socializing. The Gemini moon becomes inactive at 7:37 p.m. The final windup to this month's new moon begins at 10:36 p.m., when the moon enters the sign Cancer.

TUESDAY, JULY 9

A polarity of Venus and Uranus may spark romantic or emotional thunderstorms in the early morning hours. The dark side of a new moon brings a time for cleaning out, letting go and clearing the way for new activities. Spend time alone. Reflect on and learn from past experiences. Meditate for inner clarity and vision.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 10

The new moon culminates at 6:26 a.m., when the sun and moon align at 18-degrees Cancer. At this time the green light goes on for new beginnings across the board. Influences are favorable until 6:48 p.m., when the moon and Jupiter conjoin. Venus enters Virgo at 5:09 p.m., remaining there until August 7.

Friends expect Logan to bounce back

Assailant(s) could face attempted murder charge

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

She stands no more than 5 feet tall and weighs about 100 pounds. She's a cancer survivor and underwent a heart valve replacement a few years back.

But none of that has stopped Polly Logan, 77, a well-known Republican activist, from getting back into the fray.

Within days after her hospital stays, she could be seen around town visiting the Cohasset Consignment Shop, which she wholeheartedly supports, or organizing a fundraiser or two for local GOP candidates.

"She has a tremendous will to live," says her daughter, Martha Logan.

It's that iron will that her many friends are counting on to help Logan bounce back from an apparent home invasion that left her a prisoner for 36 hours in an upstairs bedroom with no air flow during one of the most oppressive heat waves in recent memory.

"There aren't enough positive words to do justice to this remarkable woman," said long-time friend, Julie Guild of Cohasset. "Her incredible courage, fortitude and optimistic outlook pulled her through an almost certain death in spite of her diminutive size and recent illnesses."

"She will return with her same old vigor, enthusiasm and love of life to inspire us all."
— Julie Guild, long-time friend

Cohasset Police Chief Robert Jackson said the assailant or assailants could face the charge of assault with attempt to murder.

Jim Claypoole of Hingham supports an attempted murder charge. Describing the assailants as "the worst kind of animal," he said what happened to his friend of 30 years was horrific.

"It's the most heinous crime a person can commit, to put another human being in an environment where they will die, a slow, painful death," he said..

Board balks at ball field name plan

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

It's apparent the board of selectmen is not going to get caught up with the current trend of naming rights.

Mark DeGiacomo, a resident of Beach Street and president of the Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball Association, sought selectmen's approval Tuesday to call the new ball fields the names proposed by large donors.

The selectmen were having none of it.

"People want to see the fields named after people who have made a significant contribution to this town over a long time," said Selectman Merle Brown. "Not someone who can just cut a $25,000 check."

The board felt selling the names of the fields to the highest bidder undermined some quintessential Cohasset values.

"So many people have given so much without asking for anything in return," said Selectman Ronnie McMorris. "We've never done something like this."

McMorris continued to say naming the fields after someone who has contributed a large amount of money to the fields may diminish the other honors residents have been bestowed. The Department of Public Works building was recently named the Harold W. Litchfield building and the high-school athletic complex named after Clark Chatterton.

"To say we're insulting everyone who has had something named after them is wrong," DeGiacomo said.

However, Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan agreed with McMorris.

"I have some concerns that it's been this town's practice to name things for people who have made contributions through effort, not through money," he said. "I think we should stick by that."

As part of the $150,000 that Little League has raised for the $450,000 project, $100,000 was pledged on a "naming rights" commitment.

Tuition follows students from their home districts

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

For more about the South Shore Charter School see page 4

For Hingham and Cohasset school systems, the effect of the South Shore Charter School on their respective school budgets isn't hard to live with.

But for towns like Scituate, Weymouth, Marshfield and Hull – which send considerably more students to the charter school based in Hull, the impact is significant.

Tuition for public charter schools, which are allowed under the 1993 state Education Reform Act, comes off the top of state Chapter 70 monies (state aid) that go to the sending district. In other words – at about $8,000 a student – 10 students headed to the charter school would cost the sending district $80,000 in state aid.

The actual tuition rate varies somewhat from town to town, depending on how much the "sending district" spends per pupil educating its own students and the number of students from that district attending the charter school, explains Hadley Cabral, research analyst for the state Department of Education.

During Governor William Weld's tenure on Beacon Hill, one of the reasons charter schools were created was to provide competition with the public schools.

But Hingham School Supt. Dr. Dorothy Galo doesn't think it's turned out that way.

"For a small number of parents who are looking for a different experience, the charter school provides an alternative," she says.

Galo said some of the Hingham students who have opted for the charter school have come from a home-school background and were looking for something different.

The charter school also offers an all-day kindergarten, which isn't available in Hingham.

"We thought, 'oh boy,'" she said about the possibility of losing students to that program. "But that has not been the case."

About 20 Hingham students went to the charter school its first year in 1995, but that number has leveled off to an average of six annually. Seven from Hingham and nine from Cohasset are set to attend next year, according to state figures.

Cohasset Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey views charter schools as providing alternatives for parents who are either disenchanted with the public schools or don't want to go the private route.

"I view them as an alternative that people can pursue whatever their personal reasons are," he said.

However, Malvey said he wished the state used a different funding mechanism for charter schools so the sending districts weren't negatively affected.

The South Shore Charter School's enrollment averages around 350 students. The school conducts a public enrollment lottery in February of each year that is advertised in the radio and in local newspapers. Siblings are given preference and drawn first, followed by students applying from the charter school's region that includes: Abington, Boston, Braintree, Brockton, Cohasset, Duxbury, Hanover, Hanson, Hingham, Kingston, Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Plymouth, Plympton, Quincy, Randolph, Rockland, Scituate, Weymouth and Whitman.

Students, who are not siblings and not part of the school's region, are drawn last.

Turnover in the school varies. In the 2001 school year, 24 students left the school and another 32 said they would not return the following year. Reasons provided included transportation, wanted sports program, moving, not a match, wanting to be with old friends and getting their GED (high school diploma equivalent).

The school employs about 36 full- and part-time teachers with an overall student-faculty ratio of about 9-1/2 to one, according to the charter school's annual report. The school is in compliance with state special education requirements and offers a full-inclusion program for those with special needs.

Projected cost to sending district

Calm settles in at harbor hearing

Consensus reached over improvements

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

"The consensus seems to be that something needs to be done."
— Selectman Ronnie McMorris

Maybe it was the rain that cooled the air around town Tuesday night, subduing the crowd in the selectmen's office. Whatever it was, the highly anticipated, contentious confrontation between the Friends of the Harbor, a group formed to protect the historic area, and the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, a private entity that is pursuing design ideas for the revitalization of the harbor, did not live up to the hype.

More than two dozen residents showed up for Dean Rizzo's presentation to selectmen about CRC's harbor plans. Rizzo, executive director of the CRC, has been attending various board and committee meetings over the past few months seeking input about his plans. He has also sent out close to 400 surveys asking residents for feedback about three different approaches the CRC envisions for the area.

The three options include "no improvements," an approach which will undertake no changes to the waterfront area, save new asphalt patching to fill reoccurring potholes. Existing walkway and infrastructure conditions would remain the same.

Another option, "minimum improvements," consists of primarily replacing the existing asphalt sidewalk with a new scored concrete or asphalt surface material. A rollover curbing system could be installed but no lighting, railing, sidewalk-width or road-width changes are incorporated in this approach.

The other option is "moderate improvements" which would reconstruct and widen the existing sidewalks along with an application of scored concrete. There would also be an installation of vertical granite curbing, new lighting as appropriate, tree planting, a new wood or steel railing system and minor repairs of the seawalls as needed.

Most at the selectmen's meeting on Tuesday agreed the moderate improvement plan may be the way to go, however, there was one sticking point — the fence.

The fence that lines the harbor has been there for more than 150 years and the moderate improvement plan would replace the fence with a safer guardrail. In order to trigger state and federal grants that the moderate improvement option would count on, the town would have to show that it is going to make the area significantly safer which would mean replacing the fence.

"For those of us who live on Border Street we want that fence to stay," said once concerned resident. "To replace it with another one would significantly impact our view of the harbor."

Selectmen urged residents to start looking at what kinds of fences they would feel fit into the area.

"The consensus seems to be that something needs to be done," said Selectman Ronnie McMorris. "We can no longer leave the harbor in the condition it is in."

The CRC survey results seem to support McMorris' idea.

For the 182 harbor-area residents who were mailed the survey, 41 percent, or 75 people responded. Of those, 61 percent felt the "moderate improvements" option was the best action to pursue. Rizzo sent out 192 surveys to various other community households which consisted of residents who expressed an interest in the harbor project and/or attended a harbor workshop. Of the 82 surveys which were returned, 82 percent were in favor of the moderate approach .

Rizzo has also given his presentation to boards and committees around town. He said the Design and Review Board, Conservation Commission and the Department of Public Works superintendent expressed support in concept of various aspects of the moderate approach.

"We've gotten the sense that this is the avenue we should pursue," Rizzo said.

This week in COHASSET

Meeting schedule

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall as of Monday, July 8.

Cohasset Conservation Commission, July 11, 7:30 p.m.

Water Commission, July 11, 8 p.m.

Board of Selectmen, July 16, 7:30 p.m.

Zoning Board of Appeals, July 15, 7:30 p.m.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless otherwise noted.

Contract awarded

Town Manager Mark Haddad awarded the James Brook Drainage project to the Waterfield Design Group, the same company which was awarded the village revitalization project. Haddad said with the same company doing both projects it should make coordination easier.

The design group is planning a public forum in late July or early August to get some input from residents.

Name Change

Joan Wilson, who recently purchased the Strawberry Parfait, told selectmen Tuesday she has changed the name of the restaurant. The new name is the Pleasant Street Parfait. Selectmen wished her luck.

Committee vacancies

Vacancies currently exist on the Cultural Council, Council of Elder Affairs, Harbor Committee and Drug and Alcohol Committee. Anyone interested in serving on one of those committees, should contact the selectmen's office at 781-383-4105, or stop by the office on the second floor of Town Hall.

Volunteer at the CEA

During the summer months, some of the people who give the Cohasset Elder Affair's (CEA) programs such good support throughout the year are not as available during the summer months. The CEA would greatly appreciate hearing from anyone who is interested in joining the volunteer list.

Drivers are needed! Volunteer applications are still being accepted for the summer months to help with the local driving program. Drivers are needed in one-to-three-hour shifts, once a month, mornings or afternoons.

If you enjoy working with people and are interested in helping the seniors in your community, this is the opportunity for you. Trips involve picking up seniors and taking them to local stores, shops, post office, town hall or library, and then returning them to their homes. This could be a great way for college students to do community work, or a person on vacation who might have a few hours to spare.

Others help in serving the lunch on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. CEA's greatest need is for Tuesday and Wednesday. Volunteers can set-up, dish-up the plates, serve on trays, or clean up. If you can help or might be interested, please drop in and see how the CEA handles the luncheons.

Receptionists in the office are all volunteers. If interested in occasionally filling-in for someone on vacation or having a day off, please let CEA know. Several people work with the Outreach Worker, Carol Barrett to serve as respite workers or friendly visitors. Whichever opportunity you accept, you will make a great contribution to others' lives and will work in the company of others who are equally dedicated.

Please call 781-383-9112.

Parking issues

Selectmen wish to send a notice to all residents that they have asked police to become more diligent on ticketing cars which are parked on sidewalks.

"This is something we want to enforce," Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said. "We hope people will start taking notice and stop parking on the sidewalks."

Fans, pool, beach – ways to beat heat, high humidity

By Brian Lohnes
CORRESPONDENT

When the weather gets hot, it's not uncommon to hear someone mutter the expression, "It's not the heat, it's the humidity." Last week in Cohasset, it was both.

With the nearly 100 degree temperatures, the high humidity, and last Wednesday's power outage Cohasset residents were seeking any method they could find to cool off.

The power outage, began at approximately 12:20 p.m. (July 3) according to a representative of National Grid (parent company of Mass. Electric). National Grid workers patrolled the lines looking for the source of the outage, but none could be found so workers re-energized the lines at 2:30 p.m. National Grid estimates that 2,000 homes in Cohasset were without power during the outage.

Geoff Potter of Joseph's Hardware on route 3A said, "Any cooling products we have are flying off of the shelves. Fans, inflatable pools, and small rigid pools for pets are the big sellers right now."

According to Potter, Joseph's just received a new shipment of fans and has plenty in stock. About those inflatable pools though, Potter expressed some skepticism about who was actually using them, "People come in and buy the small blow-up pools and say that their kids are going to use them, but when they come in there are no kids around."

Joseph's is equipped with an emergency generator, so they were one of the few businesses that managed to keep up with customers when the blackout began.

The sales looked much the same at Cohasset Hardware where owner Tina Watson was manning the counter, "We've had the normal amount of customers. People are buying a lot of beach stuff, coolers and grills are selling fast and we've sold out of charcoal."

"Fans, inflatable pools, and small rigid pools for pets are the big sellers right now."
— Geoff Potter, Joseph's Hardware

If the heat wasn't enough to get to Watson, the fact that Cohasset Hardware was burglarized on June 20 was. "They broke in through the office window and stole all the money out of the registers, the pet shelter donation box, and they took some crow bars and tool boxes. I have a real problem when people steal from the animals."

Watson's business is just one of several that have been victimized by burglars who have started a mini-crime wave in the midst of a heat wave. On Wednesday, Watson was ready to close up the store early because the lack of power translated to a lack of a fan and the heat was getting to be too much. Luckily, the power company was able to restore electricity before Watson packed up for the day.

Poolside

If a fan, or inflatable pool was not going to satisfy the cooling needs of Cohasset residents, the community pool at the Cohasset Swim Center was the place to be. Pool director Darlene Koetsch said that there had been a marked increase of people stopping for a dip in the pool over the last two weeks.

"We normally see several hundred people per day," Koetsch said. "When it gets hot, more people come to the pool." The pool hours are broken down into adult and free swim times so adults can have a peaceful and relaxing swim.

Pool usage is not just limited to Cohasset residents.

"We are a multi-community pool," Koetsch said. "We have camps, senior aerobics, swim lessons, and a swim team. Memberships to the pool are available but, it is important to note that non-members can use the pool by paying a small fee per usage."

The hours open for adult swimming are 7-8 a.m., 12-2 p.m., and 5:30-6:30 p.m.. The open swim times where all kids are allowed to come into the pool are 2-5:30 p.m., and 6:30-dusk (which now is about 8 p.m..). The swimming lessons program, which is a standard Red Cross course, is open to all people including non-members. To safely run the pool, a small army of life guards stand watch. Koetsch oversees a staff of 18 guards in total. She staffs four guards at a time who are always supervised by herself or the assistant director. For questions call 383-9463.

At the beach

Residents, who wanted to take at dip in nature's community pool, the ocean, headed in droves to Sandy Beach. Several hundred people were frolicking in the relatively calm Atlantic ocean last week. Beach manager Julie Dobson noticed that people's beach habits change as the temperature gets hotter and hotter.

"When it wasn't as hot people would come for an hour or two, take a quick dip and enjoy the sun," she said.. "Now they come and get in the water and they just stay in there."

The beach was noticeably more comfortable that inland spots with a gentle breeze providing a hint of natural air-conditioning. The crowd on Wednesday seemed to be primarily smaller kids with their parents. Dobson added, "It's a good way to get the little kids out of the house and let them play in the water. We have seen a big jump in the number of people here since the power outage started. It's much cooler down here than up in the houses."

Kevin Lewis, 13, of Cohasset is a beach maintenance worker and has been for three years. Kevin (a certified beach bum) noticed, "It's wicked hot here." The water temps were in the 67 degree range, very comfortable to New England beach goers."

Mary Anne, Tom and Emma Rose enjoy the shade on the common.

Senior citizens

"The heat makes most of us uncomfortable, but can pose a serious health risk for the elderly. Heat-related maladies often strike elder members of the community during these hot summer spells and Carol Barrett of the Council on Elder Affairs is working hard to help. The CEA provides several important services for community elders during the summer months.

"We make sure to run a story on how to deal with the heat in our newsletter," she said. "We give the elders tips on how to stay hydrated and not to exert themselves.

""The elders that live in the community for the most part know to stay out of the sun and not to over do it," Barrett said. "They know what they are supposed to do."

As a service to those elders that do not have the luxury of air conditioning, the CEA opens up its main dining area every day for residents to come an cool off inside.

"We turn the air conditioning on at 8 a.m.. and people are welcome to come in at 8:30 until we close at 3:30," Barrett said. The CEA (also known as the Senior Center) is at 3 North Main St.

The CEA also provides a food shopping service and a medicine pick-up service for elders who do not think they are up to the task of getting out in the heat.

"Currently we call 18 elders in the community who are home bound and we food shop for them. We also make a group shopping trip one a week," she said. The service is open to the public. For more information call the CEA at 383-9112.

South Shore Charter School has non-traditional approach

By Steve Profazier
CORRESPONDENT

When reflecting on your school years, you probably don't remember traveling to other countries, participating in internship programs, and community service.

But if you're a graduate of the South Shore Charter School in Hull – those are exactly the memories you'll take with you to college and beyond.

The school's curriculum is often very different than traditional classroom instruction and is very much project-based, according to teacher Rick Small of Scituate..

"We try to use practical applications of knowledge to connect students to the real world and better prepare them for life after graduation," he said.

Founded in 1993 under the state Education Reformation Act, the South Shore Charter School is open to local public school students. The school spans all grades from kindergarten through high school and is divided into a separate primary, middle, and high school – each housed in a separate building in Hull.

South Shore Charter School students participate in a variety of programs, such as local internships. The school also tries to give students a wider and more accurate view of the world through several international experiences.

This past school year, some high school students traveled to Italy to study classical guitar under the tutorship of Aldo Minella, a man who is world renown for his classical guitar abilities.

In the 2000-2001 school year, students traveled to El Salvador and assisted Habitat For Humanity by spending a week helping to build homes for the needy there. This trip encompassed both an international experience and another of the school's focuses, community service. Besides the trip to El Salvador, one of the graduation requirements is to complete 75 hours of community service over two years.

Students must also participate in a senior debate held in front of the school, prove proficiency in Microsoft programs, create their résumé, assemble a portfolio, as well as be accepted to a college or military branch, even if they do not plan to attend.

"The extra graduation requirements, made for a more different senior year than most people have," said Alex Etkind, 2002 graduate from Cohasset. "Most seniors have a relaxed second half to their year, but we had to keep working till the end."

The school's extra requirements and non-traditional teaching methods are intended to teach personal responsibility. The school's classes involve a lot of independent work and student accountability.

"I learned how to be more motivated and more responsible for myself during my two years [at the school,]" Etkind said. "The teachers don't baby-sit you at all; you're mostly responsible for yourself and for your own work."

The school's track record has proven very impressive in the years since its opening. Many of the graduating students have been accepted to top schools all around the country. Several graduating students in the past have received full scholarships to the University of Massachusetts, and this year alone saw three of the graduates being accepted to St. John's College in Maryland.

With several successful academic years completed, the school has come to be regarded by some as competition for local public schools.

"We are no threat to the public school system," Small said. "We just can't handle the numbers that they can. All we're trying to be is another option for students who may be able to benefit more from the instruction style we offer."

South Shore Charter School has a student body of about 350.. The limited available space aids in keeping the classes to a comfortable size and allows for more personal interaction between teachers and students.

"I liked having small classes," Etkind said. "I really enjoyed getting to know the teachers on a more personal level; I got to know them as people and not just as instructors."

Hagerty Committee irked over park project changes

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Temperatures soared during last week's heat wave, but they were mild in comparison with the amount of heat being generated by the Hagerty Committee.

The long-standing committee, formed eight years ago to create a public park at the two-plus acre site at the foot of Parker Avenue, is hot about actions at Town Hall. Members claim the selectmen's office overstepped its bounds when it comes to construction at the site and use of monies from the Hagerty fund.

But Town Manager Mark Haddad says it's much ado about nothing.

"There are no problems with the project," he said. "There were some changes that had to be made and we made them, it looks great now."

The committee claims engineering plans were changed on the fly without its input and selectmen authorized Hagerty property money for work on the boathouse, which is leased to the Cohasset Maritime Institute. According to Hagerty Committee chairman Russ Bonetti, in 1995 almost $5,000 from the fund was provided to CMI.

The committee also asserts the gangway to the floating docks is attached to the pier in such a way that it cannot be removed without disassembling the entire railing. Members also say the location of the floating docks in incorrect, asserting they should be farther out.

The town originally bought the property from Mary Hagerty in 1993. After the town bought the former Cohasset Colonial Furniture site, the Hagerty committee endured a permitting process with the Army Corps of Engineers that lasted years.

> "The project has not been done to the specifications we agreed on."
> — Hagerty Committee member Paul Pattison

The entire restoration project at the site cost about $265,000 to complete. Town Meeting approved $200,000 for the project in the fall of 2000, but had to approve another $75,000 in the spring, when project bids came in much higher than anticipated.

The Hagerty Committee has also taken issue with CMI, a program created by Jack Buckley which schools students in maritime education, claiming boat storage by CMI near the boathouse in unacceptable. The boats take up scarce parking spaces in the newly named Mariners Park at the site. Lastly, the committee is concerned that benches have not been provided as promised

"The project has not been done to the specifications we agreed on," said Hagerty Committee member Paul Pattison. "The selectmen deviated from the original plan."

Committee members were irate at their last meeting about the lack of attention to their concerns.

"The basic problem is out of the five selectmen maybe one of them understands what's going on," said Vee Roebuck, another committee member. "We need to go to Town Counsel and figure out what's happened."

While the committee is entitled to seek the opinion of Town Counsel, Town Manager Mark Haddad said, that's unnecessary. He said the project has been completed, and in his opinion looks great and was finished correctly.

He admitted changes were made while construction was being done but said that happens with every project.

"With any project you do things that come up during the construction phase which are unforeseen," Haddad said. "We made the changes because of design flaws and went on."

Haddad said he met a few of the committee members along with a couple selectmen at the site to discuss the problems. Haddad said he iterated to the group that once the committee completed the design phase, it was up to him to make sure the project was completed.

"The project is done, it's completed," he said. "This shouldn't be an issue."

Haddad also said Town Meeting appropriated funds to be used for improvements to the Hagerty site He explained the article allowed the selectmen to make the appropriation to CMI because it improved the area.

"Selectmen we're totally within their jurisdiction," he said. "There's no question about that."

Haddad praised the committee, which he said did a "fantastic job" planning a passive, recreational park.

"We should not lose sight of the fact that the committee did a great job and I really appreciate all the hard work put in by the members," he said.

Board balks at ball field name plan

$50,000 to the fields and asked for the right to name the three field complex through community input and possibly a contest.

William Allard, a fairly new resident to town donated $25,000 to CYBSA and asked the baseball field be named "Allard Field" in honor of his father, a long time supporter of Little League.

Finally, Shellanne and John Durkin, contributed $25,000 to the fields and asked the softball field be named "Freedom Field" in honor of their friend who died at the World Trade Center on Sept. 11.

The fields are funded by a partnership between Little League and the town. At Town Meeting in March, residents appropriated $300,000 — $100,000 of which came from the Community Preservation Fund, to go along with the $150,000 donated by Little League.

"A major part of our fundraising effort has been in connection with these naming rights," DeGiacomo said. "These people have been very generous."

Agnes McCann, a resident of Doane Street, said she was offended DeGiacomo presumed these names would be acceptable to the town. It was her feeling that the town, and possibly Town Meeting, should decide the names of the fields.

"I think it's shocking that we would sell names like this," she said. "The town contributed more money to this than any other entity and should be empowered with this decision."

Selectman Tom Callahan agreed and said the ability to write a $25,000 check should not be synonymous with naming rights.

"I don't like this whole naming rights trend," Callahan said. "I want to make sure more people have a voice in this decision."

A decision on the fields was tabled and will be discussed at the board's next meeting on July 23.

Assailant(s) could face attempted murder charge

tape sometime Monday night (July 1) and left in her upstairs bedroom in her Nichols Road home until a handyman, who is an off-and-on tenant at Logan's property, found her and called 9-1-1 at 1:53 p.m. Wednesday (July 3). Neighbors last reported seeing Logan around 5 p.m., that Monday, police said.

Jackson said the bedroom was sweltering with attic-like temperature that may have reached 110 degrees. Logan, who was wearing a nightgown, was found on the floor near the door, making it difficult for police to enter the bedroom. She was treated for dehydration and taken to South Shore Hospital where she was expected to remain until late this week. Jackson said she was not gagged.

"It was absolutely stifling in that room," Jackson said, saying the door and windows were shut. "She is fortunate to be alive."

Jackson said jewelry, some of which was taken from Logan's person, and some silver items were stolen along with Logan's black 1994 Ford Escort wagon that was recovered last at about 7:45 p.m. Thursday (July 4) on St. Mark's Road in Dorchester. Neighbors in the area reported seeing the wagon, which has a vanity plate that says "S 2."

Police have interviewed Logan several times and are trying to piece together the facts surrounding the case. They have not yet been able to determine how many people were involved in the robbery.

In addition to attempted murder, Jackson said the assailant or assailants could face an array of other serious charges including assault and battery with a dangerous weapon (duct tape) on a person 65 years or older and burglary and assault in a dwelling.

Dan Adams, the handyman, who has been in interviewed at length, is not a considered a suspect and has been cooperating with police.

But Jackson added, "we are not ruling anyone in and we are not ruling anyone out."

Friends say Logan has taken Adams, who has lived at various addresses around town including an apartment at the Community Center, "under her wing" and helped him get involved in local Republican affairs.

Logan, the vice chairman of the state Republican Party, was still out and about helping candidates in the days and hours before her ordeal. She attended the kick-off event for Republican Nathaniel Palmer, who is running for state representative, Saturday June 29 at the Hingham Community Center. And Monday, July 1, despite the 90-plus degree temperatures, Logan ventured upstairs to the Hingham Journal-Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square to drop off an announcement of a fund-raiser for Kerry Healey, a Republican candidate for lieutenant governor, to be held July 28 at the South Shore Country Club.

Guild says Logan is an inspiration to many.

"We are most fortunate to have her still with us," she said. "She will return with her same old vigor, enthusiasm and love of life to inspire us all."

Claypoole described Logan as always having a smile on her face.

"She's always been an invigorating woman who was involved to the fullest extent in the political process," he said. "She works diligently for the core beliefs she has and I'm confident she has the resiliency to snap back from this."

Police say the robbery is not connected to recent break-ins in Cohasset Village and another in a strip-mall on Route 3A. They also do not think it is related to two robberies in Yarmouth where elderly homeowners were tied up and robbed before the assailants fled.

Jackson also said he believes the attack on Logan is an isolated incident and that other Cohasset residents are not at risk. He declined to elaborate because of the investigation.

"The public's need to know and the needs of the investigation have to be balanced," he said.

Jackson said this type of crime is not common in town.

"In my 23 years, I can't recall anything like this," he said.

Police are asking citizens who saw anything or anyone at Logan's house after 5 p.m. Monday July 1 through 2 p.m., Wednesday, July 3, to call the station at 781-383-1055.

LIBRARY FUN FOR LITTLE ONES

Looking for something fun, entertaining and free to do on a Tuesday evening? Steve Rudolph will be performing his "Red, White and Blue Magic Show" at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Tuesday, July 16, at 7 p.m. The show is just one of the free performances offered on Tuesday evenings. These performances are generously sponsored by the "Friends of the Cohasset Library." No registration is required. Fun for all and a wonderful way to end a warm summer day.

YOUNG SAILORS EXCEL

Andrew Flynn, age 15, has just returned from the U.S. Sailing National Youth Championships in San Diego. Andrew competed in the Doublehanded Division, sailing a Club 420 as crew for David Siegal, a recent graduate of Tabor Academy from South Dartmouth. After four days of racing in a field of 45 boats the pair took fifth place and came home with medals. On July 8, Andrew and Dave left for Tavira, Portugal where they will be competing in the International 420 World Championships. They will be joining six other American sailors representing the U.S. against some of the best sailors in the world. I cannot wait to hear the stories and results from this amazing and talented duo; please keep us posted!

A SPECIAL THANK YOU

Several weeks ago, I placed a notice from a very sad cat owner who was looking so hard to find her beloved pet. Unfortunately, Anne Rowland's cat has yet to be found but she wanted to thank everyone who called with an "orange cat siting." Anne is very grateful to the many people who took the time and effort to call her. There are obviously a lot of caring people around our town, and it's not limited to cat lovers! This is so helpful to know when you have lost a loved pet!

WELCOME HOME, ILENE

Guess who has come back to town? The very popular, former Osgood School secretary Ilene Colwill has returned to Massachusetts. Ilene looks forward to seeing all her friends and would appreciate any leads for interesting administrative positions either on the South Shore or in Boston. Until she is able to take up residence in her home on Hull Street again, she can be reached by email at Icolwill1202@aol.com or a message can be left for her at 781-383-6862. Welcome home Ilene! I know that Cohasset will welcome you with open arms, ready to give you a hug whenever it is needed and even when it is not.

FARMERS MARKET

Don't forget to head down to the weekly Farmers Market held every Thursday afternoon on Cohasset Common. This wonderful event features local artists, musicians and wonderful fresh fruit, veggies and more.

I hope everyone enjoyed the Fourth of July weekend and stayed somewhat cool and safe. It is so amazing to me how fast it all goes making the saying "time flies when you are having fun" so true!

I want to send continued get-well wishes out to Polly Logan as she recovers from her terrible ordeal last week.

That is all for this week. Make sure to have all your news and events to me no later than Mondays at noon.

Cohasset residents join the cancer fight

Twelve riders from Cohasset will join in the fight against cancer by riding in the Pan-Massachusetts Challenge (PMC), presented by MFS Investment Management, Aug. 3 to 4.

Cohasset riders include:

Chip Barnes, James Clark, Jeffrey Goldstein, Mary Allen, Michael Fechter, Michael Kearney, Michele Sacks, Peter Vitello, Robert Allen, Robert Mahoney, Ron Sacks, Susan McMackin.

In its 22nd year, the PMC is the nation's top bicycling fundraiser. More than 3,600 riders will raise $15 million for the Jimmy Fund, which supports cancer care and research at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. It is the Jimmy Fund's largest fundraiser. With 92 cents of each dollar raised going directly to the Jimmy Fund, the PMC has contributed nearly $69 million to the world-renowned Dana-Farber Cancer Institute since its inception in 1980.

This summer, each of the 3,600 riders will commit to raising at least $2,000 to be considered a member of the PMC team. The majority of PMC participants, however, exceed the minimum contribution. They actually raise more than twice the amount required, raising an average of $4,600 each.

This summer, each of the 3,600 riders will commit to raising at least $2,000 to be considered a member of the PMC team.

The event offers six routes taking riders through 44 Massachusetts towns: four are two-day rides and two are for one day. Two-day riders have their choice of. the original 192-mile Sturbridge to Provincetown, or 186-mile Sturbridge-Bourne-Wellesley; 169-mile Wellesley-Bourne-Provincetown; or 166-mile Wellesley-Bourne-Wellesley route. One-day riders may cycle the 108-mile Sturbridge-Bourne, or the 89-mile Wellesley-Bourne.

Registration is full. To become a volunteer, a virtual rider, or make a financial contribution, visit www.pmc.org or call (800) WE-CYCLE. Checks can be made payable to PMC, 77 Fourth Ave., Needham, MA 02492.

Teachers workshop at Holly Hill Farm

Massachusetts Agriculture in the Classroom is sponsoring a workshop for teachers at Holly Hill Farm in Cohasset, on Wednesday, July 24, from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. titled "Keeping Your Classroom Fresh and Growing. The workshop will focus on Organic Farming, Farmland Preservation and Designing Farm Equipment. The $30 fee includes lunch and all materials. Ten professional development points are provided with accompanying classroom activity.

The morning will be spent learning about organic farming from several different farms that grow vegetables and small fruits traditionally as well as organically. The difference between the two kinds of farming will be explained. Following a farm lunch, owner Frank White will offer a tour of the organic farm field on this 140-acre farm, most of which is woodland protected by a conservation trust. Remnants of the equine sculpture and unique farm equipment created by the former generation is part of the history.

Meet Atlantica's new executive chef

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The harbor improvements have already started. No, not the ones that have been publicly debated on for months, but Atlantica has hired a new executive chef.

Harry Haroutonian, who recently moved into a house in Sandwich, is a native New Englander and has strong background in New England fare.

He has 15 years experience in the restaurant business including a stint at Legal Seafood and Jasper White's Summer Shack.

"I just loved cooking so much that I stayed in the field."

Harry Haroutonian, the new executive chef at Atlantica, comes with 15 years experience in the restaurant business,

"Good, simple New England fare in Harry's (Haroutonian) focus for his new endeavor here at Atlantica," said Kathleen Janson, public relations director for the Cohasset Harbor Inn. "His vision is to go back to the basics, good food at reasonable prices while enjoying beautiful views of Cohasset Harbor."

Haroutonian, who was hired by Joe Campbell, director of operations at Atlantica, said he brings leadership and a strong culinary knowledge of New England food to the restaurant.

He said he started cooking while in high school but never attended a culinary college. He credits Jasper White, a famous chef who owns restaurants in the state including the Summer Shack, for developing his talent.

"I just loved cooking so much that I stayed in the field," he said. "I learned a lot about classic cooking from Jasper (White)."

Haroutonian feels he was brought in to bring Atlantica back to its roots, a fine dining experience that's attractive to local connoisseurs. He said he realizes Cohasset is a very close-knit community and wants to make sure he pleases local consumers.

"Our relationship with the town has been rocky the last couple years," he said. "I'm hoping to change all that and make Atlantica the jewel of the South Shore it once was."

Haroutonian said he has a couple menu changes on the horizon including introducing some vegetarian options, a braised lamb fillet and Miso glazed halibut. The new menu will feature many different seafood options, Haroutonian's specialty, as well as various dishes of lamb, pork and beef. The children's menu has also been expanded.

"I want to make it more of accessible experience," he said. "People should come in to enjoy the food and the view."

Haroutonian said he enjoys being surrounded by the vast natural resources Cohasset offers and tries to do business with local merchants whenever possible.

"We try to be as local as possible," he said. "We get our lobsters from the Cohasset Lobster Pound and much of our fish from Scituate, we're heading in the right direction and want residents to be excited about Atlantica."

Campbell said having worked with Haroutonian in the past, he knew Atlantica would be a good fit for the chef. The two worked together at Legal Seafood.

"We want to take the restaurant from fine dining to more of a casual experience with maintaining our emphasis on quality, fancy food," Campbell said. "We wanted to do something more local, more New England and try to get back to our former glory."

Campbell continued to say that the restaurant incorporates to of the best aspects of Cohasset, a great location and fresh seafood.

Janson said she is looking forward to Haroutonian coming aboard.

"He holds a vision for a culinary change at Atlantica to provide families with simple food, done right," she said. "It should be a great environment for people to dine."

Atlantica restaurant has private dining rooms accommodating from 10 to 110 people and harbor view function rooms which can fit up to 300 people.

Eyes and ears

Here at the Cohasset Mariner, we're regulars at the police department. We call to follow up on activity that comes across our police scanner and we visit the station once a week to pick up the log.

Over the years, this contact has provided us with an inside look at how police operate and the challenges the department faces.

Much of what police officers do is perceived as negative. They are out to catch the "bad guys and gals" whose difficulties can range from speeding, drunk driving and road rage – to drug dealing, assault and worse.

We've also found that police officers themselves are not negative. The vast majority entered the profession, which is in large part a thankless one, to make a difference and to protect the public. They believe in what they are doing and at times, have to endure considerable abuse from a rowdy or dangerous suspect.

Cohasset and its immediate neighbors are still "small towns" but are not immune to big-time crime or very bad people. Just last week, a parole violator was apprehended in Wompatuck State Park after he allegedly beat up his girlfriend. As it turned out, the parolee had history of violent crime, but thanks to the cooperative effort of Hingham police and State Police, the man was apprehended without incident.

The assailant who fatally stabbed a man at the basketball courts at Nantasket Beach two weeks ago was tracked down and captured in Hingham and two men who tried to rob a strip mall on Route 3A in Cohasset, took off, crashed their bikes in Hingham, and fled into the woods and neighborhoods.

And what happened here in Cohasset to Polly Logan was horrific. The wonderful woman, who at 77, doesn't weigh 100 pounds, was robbed in her own home, bound with duct tape and apparently left to die.

If we've learned anything from Sept. 11, it was to start paying more attention to our surroundings, to get to know our neighbors and to look out for one another.

Here in New England, we're largely a private lot and we like it that way. We're more likely than our counterparts in other regions to ignore strangers, or something out-of-place or different, preferring not to get involved for fear of being nosy.

And we enjoy our neighbors, but on our own terms, and aren't always known for neighborhood block parties to get acquainted. We tend to mind our own business.

However, that being said, we need to be the eyes and ears of the police, who cannot be everywhere all the time. For example, an incident at Wompatuck pulls police officers off their regular beat.

If we see something or someone that is suspicious, we need to alert the police. We also need to be good witnesses. If we're in a drug store, for example, during an OxyContin robbery, and get a look at the suspect, we should be able to describe him to police.

None of us should have to think about crime or becoming a victim. But, alas, it isn't a perfect world and here in Cohasset we are not immune to the ills of society.

DTC yard sale funds scholarship

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee wants to thank the many people who helped make its recent yard sale so successful. With all proceeds dedicated in advance to the Committee's annual scholarship fund, Cohasset folks just lined up to give, bring, tag, move, drive, lift, buy and sell great stuff at easy prices and had fun doing it.

The Committee enjoyed enormous support for the June 22 event, from hard-working members and a generous community, in spite of a one-week rain delay. The biggest winner will be the Cohasset High graduating senior who becomes next year's recipient of the annual Joseph F. Walsh, III Memorial Scholarship for which over $500 was raised.

Thank you one and all.

Agnes McCann, Chairperson
Cohasset Democratic Town Committee

Special thanks to Legion Post

TO THE EDITOR:

The Committee on Town History wishes to express its grateful appreciation and thanks to the George Mealy American Legion Post for sponsoring the first official author signing of the "Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume III, 1950-2000" by Jacqueline M. Dormitzer.

The Commander, Steve Wigmore, and Vice Commander Robert Jackson did a superb job in planning and organizing the first official signing on June 29, 2002.

They and their colleagues were most helpful in having the flags flying, music playing and refreshments on hand for the more than 100 people who stopped by to have their books autographed by Jackie Dormitzer.

During brief remarks, it was especially moving to hear Vice Commander Jackson intone the names of the nine Cohasset citizens who lost their lives in the Korean conflict(1) and the war in Vietnam (8).

This book is dedicated to their sacrifice made so that we who live in this beautiful and very special community and throughout the country might have another chance to live in peace and liberty.

And finally, the committee wishes to thank the entire community for its six-year commitment to this project. Nearly 800 books were sold pre-publication.

As of Tuesday, July 9, all books ordered pre-publication were either mailed or delivered.

CRC is not validity-tested

TO THE EDITOR:

After reading Murray Campbell's Letter to the Editor of July 4, I had to think, "What's wrong with this picture?"

Surely citizens' initiatives—like the new library, the art center, the community center, the Conservation Trust, Little League fields and the CEES initiative for Little Harbor—have been a critical asset to our town's development. Each encapsulated a deeply felt need and a strategy with grass roots support. They each required substantial intellectual and financial support beyond what elected officials and town resources could accommodate.

So why isn't the CRC accorded the same respect?

The fundamental reason is that CRC, unlike other citizen initiatives, has not been validity-tested. No person or group of persons, other than those who founded CRC and hired and paid for its full-time staff, has ever submitted to public review the issue of validity. Mr. Campbell states that the CRC "has initiated and made use of input from a wide range of residents," but the issue upon which invitations for input has been centered is the light posts, curb stones and sidewalks for the way to Cohasset Harbor, not the issue of whether anyone who lives, let's say, on Elm Street, wishes it redesigned.

This citizen (who is neither a newcomer nor one who has refrained from contributing to town activities) says "show me" why the CRC has a valid purpose. I don't think the title "revitalization" is self-sustaining. I think it has a Madison Avenue flavor—an avenue most residents of Cohasset eschew. The reason that the "Friends" I assume reject the CRC is its purpose has never been validated by those residents who will be most affected by its environmental impact.

It is argumentative for Mr. Campbell to assume that the response to CRC's initiative will be positive. For me, CRC has never asked the critical question: Is Cohasset vital or does it need "revitalization"? For one who has moved from the "vital" suburb of Newton, I believe Cohasset's tranquility is just the right prescription. I would love it to remain Boston's best kept secret!

Rec. Dept. thanks Playhouse Assoc.

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the Recreation Commission and the Youth Resources Committee, I would like to express our appreciation for the South Shore Playhouse Associates and its very generous donations and interest in our community.

The South Shore Playhouse Associates has provided half of the funding, a generous sum of $1,000 for the Recreation Commission's two summer band concerts on the Common. Performances will be by the 30-piece South Shore Concert Band under the direction of Richard P. Whitmarsh. These concerts are on the Cohasset Common at 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday, July 23 (the first was on July 9), and are open to the public and free of charge.

The American Federation of Musicians, N.Y.C. contributes the other half of the funding for these concerts on a matching-fund basis.

The South Shore Playhouse Associates has also thoughtfully donated $1,000 toward operations at the Cohasset Youth Resources Teen Garage. This very kind donation will allow us to provide Cohasset teens with a variety of special activities and events along with extended hours of operation at the Teen Garage.

The commissioners, the Playhouse Associates and staff of the Recreation Department and Youth Resources Committee appreciate the continued interest in and concern for our community and its residents. I believe that I am able to speak for the residents who attend the performances, and youngsters who attend the Garage in thanking the South Shore Playhouse Associates on their behalf as well.

I hope you will join me in wishing them a successful 2002 season, both in Cohasset and Hyannis.

John M. Worley, Director
Recreation Commission

Donations for Sandy Beach

TO THE EDITOR:

Thank you for the recent article on Sandy Beach which included our new handicapped ramp and lifeguard stand. It was good to see the South Shore VoTech receive the publicity for their excellent job and contribution to our beach.

We need to let people know that the labor was donated, but that the cost of the materials was not. When the original walk was installed, the fund raising was done by David Chittim, a trustee at the time. David's death was a real loss to our entire community, and in a special way to the Sandy Beach Board. If he were here, we know he would be asking those same generous people to help us once again. It would be nice to think of donations being made in David's name and memory by those friends. Others might also wish to donate in honor of family or friends who will be using the walk. Perhaps some of our former lifeguards or their families would like to make a donation for the new lifeguard stand.

HEALTH NOTES

Protecting yourself from rabies

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Several recent incidences of rabies exposure on the South Shore have prompted this article on the threat and what you can do about it. Although the town has had no reports of rabid animals, we have had a few reports of animals acting strangely; not unusual, since we also sometimes get reports of people acting strangely. Each year about 500 animals test positive for rabies at the state's laboratory, and over 2,500 humans are exposed to rabid or potentially rabid animals. Exposure to a rabid or potentially rabid animal can cost an individual over $2500 to receive post-exposure prophylaxis (rabies shots).

What is rabies?

Rabies is a disease of the brain and spinal cord and is caused by a virus. Rabies is a fatal disease. Rabies in humans is very rare in the U.S., but rabies in certain animals, especially wildlife, is common in many parts of Massachusetts.

How is rabies spread?

The rabies virus lives in the saliva (spit) and nervous tissues of infected animals and is spread when they bite or scratch. The virus may also be spread if saliva from an infected animal touches broken skin, open wounds or the lining of the mouth, nose, or eyes. In caves crowded with many bats, it may be possible to inhale the virus floating on bat saliva in the air.

What kinds of animals spread rabies?

The rabies virus can infect any mammal (if it has hair or fur, it is a mammal), but is more common among certain ones like bats, skunks, foxes, and raccoons. Cats, dogs, and livestock can also get rabies and spread it to their owners if they do not have special shots to protect them. Rabies is very rare among small rodents like squirrels, rats, mice, and chipmunks. Fish, reptiles (such as snakes, turtles and lizards), amphibians (such as frogs and salamanders), and insects cannot get or spread rabies.

How common is animal rabies in Massachusetts?

Rabies in raccoons first appeared in Massachusetts in 1992. Since then, raccoon rabies has been found in almost all cities and towns in the state, with the exception of Cape Cod and the islands of Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket. Rabies in bats has been a problem throughout Massachusetts at least since it was first found in 1961.

How can you tell if an animal is rabid?

Rabid animals often behave strangely after the virus attacks their brains. Rabid animals may attack people or other animals for no reason, or they may lose their fear of people and seem to be unnaturally friendly. Not all rabid animals act in these ways, however, so you should avoid all wild animals, especially bats, skunks, foxes, and raccoons. Also, you should not feed or touch stray cats and dogs.

Each year about 500 animals test positive for rabies at the state's laboratory

What should you do if you think you've been exposed to rabies?

If you have been bitten or scratched by a stray or wild animal, or by a pet or farm animal that has been behaving oddly, follow these steps:

1. Wash the wound with soap and water right away for at least ten minutes.
2. Call your health care provider and local board of health as soon as you finish washing. They will help you decide if you need to be treated for rabies. It is important to follow their instructions exactly.
3. Contact your local animal control officer to catch or find the animal that scratched or bit you. The Board of Health can tell you how to have it tested by the State Rabies Lab.

If your pet has been bitten or scratched by an animal that you think may be rabid, put on gloves before touching your pet. Follow the steps above but call your pet's veterinarian.

What is the treatment for people exposed to rabies?

The treatment for people exposed to rabies involves two medications. One, called rabies immune globulin (or RIG), contains antibodies to fight the virus and is given once. The other medication is rabies vaccine, which ensures long-lasting protection, and is given as five shots over the course of a month. (Rabies shots are no longer given in the stomach.) People who received the full series of rabies shots in the past need only two rabies vaccine shots. To work best, the medications should begin as soon as possible after the bite or scratch. However, if the animal has been caught and will be tested for rabies, you can wait for the test results to see if the shots are necessary.

How can you prevent rabies?

- Avoid wild animals, especially bats, skunks, foxes, and raccoons. Do not feed or pet strays. Avoid any animal or pet that you do not know. Report any animal that behaves oddly to your local animal control official.
- Teach your children to avoid wildlife, strays, and all other animals they do not know well.
- Do not handle dead, sick, or injured wild animals yourself, call the police or animal control officer. If you must handle the animal, use heavy gloves, sticks or other tools to avoid direct contact.
- Make sure your pets are vaccinated against rabies and that their shots are up-to-date. By law, all dogs, cats and ferrets must be vaccinated against rabies.
- Feed pets indoors and keep them indoors at night. If they are outside during the day, keep them on a leash or fenced in so they cannot wander. It is possible for vaccinated pets to get rabies. Pets allowed to roam freely are more likely to get rabies and possibly expose people and other pets in your home.
- Fasten trash can lids tightly. Garbage attracts animals (like skunks, raccoons, and strays) looking for an easy meal.
- It is against state law to keep wild animals such as skunks or raccoons as pets. There are no rabies vaccines for most wild species.
- Cap your chimney with screens and block openings in attics, cellars, and porches to keep wild animals like bats and raccoons out of your home.
- If you have bats in your house, talk to a professional about bat-proofing your home.

Where can you get more information?

- Your doctor, nurse or health center
- The Board Of Health
- Massachusetts Department of Public Health, Division of Epidemiology and Immunization at (617) 9836800 or toll-free at 1-888-658-2850 or on the MDPH website at http://www.state.ma.us/dph/

The not-so Splendid Splinter

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I wish I could say something nice about the late Ted Williams. Everybody else is. But I can't.

I met him face-to-face only once. It was on one of my rare business visits to the Red Sox dressing room. Ted was in what might best be called a surly mood. I wanted to ask him a question. He didn't want to answer it. He proposed that I perform an unlikely physical action upon my own person. He had nice teeth.

I saw him in action a few times but one sticks in my mind. It was a beautiful day in the spring of '49 or '50 so I and a classmate named Jim Courtney skipped school one afternoon and, since our campus, Boston University, was only a few blocks from Fenway Park, we decided to take in the ball game.

Jimmy was a character in his own right. When he learned in science class that atoms (or was it molecules?) were made up of little solar systems, he was the guy who suggested that our big solar system was a molecule in a cheese sandwich and someone was about to take a big bite of it. He later became a priest, which probably doesn't mean anything.

For the next week or so the debate raged whether he was gesturing at the fans in the stands or the sportswriters in the press box.

But I digress . . .

If I recall right, the Sox were playing the Tigers that day 50 years ago and Ted hit one of his 521 home runs. As he touched home plate, he looked up in the stands, hooked his left hand inside his right elbow and made a gesture that was more international than Esperanto.

For the next week or so the debate raged whether he was gesturing at the fans in the stands or the sportswriters in the press box with whom he was constantly feuding. He called them "the Knight of the Keyboard," usually accompanied by a rousing guffaw.

Some 20 years later, I learned the origin of that feud, or at least I was told it was the origin.

In the late '60s or early '70s, I was sent out to Worcester or thereabouts to interview Eldon Auker, who was a big wig in a national manufacturers group. Auker was better known as a pretty fair pitcher whose long career included one year with the Red Sox. That happened to be 1939, Ted's first year with the team.

The acknowledged king of the Boston sports writing fraternity in those days was Bill Cunningham of the Post. One fall day, Bill announced that he was so fed up with college football in these parts that he was going to cover a high school game instead. That may have been the only time that a Brockton-Weymouth game ever led the paper.

But again I digress . . .

As Auker recalled it, Bill was covering the Red Sox in spring training in 1939 when he was introduced to Ted. "I can't talk to you now," Auker quoted Bill as saying. "But don't worry, I'll make you famous later on." "Who the hell was that?" asked Ted and a feud was born.

Hey, maybe that was something nice!

Treasure the memories...

GOOD VIBES

BOB WHITNEY

In the last few weeks, I have had a truly wonderful experience. I received a phone call from the principal of my high school in Western New York with the news that after 35 years I was being nominated to my alma maters sports Hall of Fame, a proud moment indeed that brought back some stories, favorite memories, and anecdotes from my high school days. Those who most influenced me in my early life obviously my mom and dad but also, teammates, teachers, archrivals, and last but not least my coaches. My mind and thoughts quickly shifted to my elementary school gym teacher who later became my high school baseball and basketball coach. Thinking about him after 35 years was remarkably moving for me and suddenly my most cherished memories became freshly present. He instilled in me the core values, which made many things possible - hard work, discipline, perseverance, and courage. Most importantly, he gave me the encouragement and confidence to take advantage of my God given talents and abilities. It also reminded me how sometimes the most powerful action we can take is to reconnect with those special people from our past.

Here are some of the reasons why you may want to consider this as well:

- You will gain a. new sense of gratitude for those people you valued in your past. What a great feeling it is to recall the contribution that someone made in your life.
- You will literally reach into your past and feel those spontaneously related stories and how far you have grown in your life.
- When you reconnect you will give a magical gift to that special person. How can you possibly measure the emotional and spiritual significance of this meeting after 10, 20, 30 years?
- What an example to set for your own children or other members of the younger generation about real-life, face-to-face role models rather than fantasy action heroes, athletic superstars, MTV, or musical rock stars.
- You will treasure the memories and some of the best moments of your life. Quite honestly, I can't wait for the Hall of Fame induction ceremony in October and the chance to reconnect and reminisce with the man who was so responsible for what I stand for and what I have accomplished in my life. No evidence state's tax free fall is ending

MICHAEL P. NORTON

Recap and analysis of the week in state government ending July 5.

This was supposed to have been a celebratory week.

After taking a political licking for raising taxes and cutting popular government programs, like education, zoos, and health care, lawmakers hoped to head home last week at least being able to say they'd finally balanced the state budget on time and prepared a shaken state government for a return to fiscal stability.

But the fiscal year started on July 1 with state government again spending more than it can afford. House and Senate negotiators spent the week trying to reconcile $23 billion budget proposals that are somewhere between $500 million and $700 million out of balance.

Those gaps are on top of a $150 million budget deficit left over from fiscal 2002. And that red ink remained on the state's ledgers despite the use of $2 billion of the $3 billion in reserves state officials had on hand when tax collections began to plummet in July 2001.

But the most troubling news is what's not happening. Lawmakers and Acting Gov. Jane Swift have been budgeting with the expectation, based on the advice of experts that the economy, and thus tax receipts, would begin to grow this summer. It isn't. There are a few encouraging economic indicators, but there's no evidence that the state's tax revenue free fall is ending.

June tax receipts were down 31 percent from last June, a $304 million decline. "That's kind of like, to my perspective, a scary number," said state revenue commissioner Alan LeBovidge.

Sales tax receipts are down too, but have outperformed the income tax. "That's a big item. It's pretty indicative of how the wage and salary demographic looks," added Swift's budget chief, administration and finance (A&F) secretary Kevin Sullivan. "If you're not performing in personal income – capital gains, stock options, and bonuses – then nothing in the sales tax is going to make up for that."

And with spreading news of major corporate scandals filling the newspapers and airwaves, economic researchers at University of Massachusetts' Donahue Institute issued a bulletin suggesting the state economy will remain flat through November. Consumers are still keeping the economy afloat, and recoveries in the health, education and real estate sectors have been offset by continuing trouble in the high tech market and in state government itself, UMass Professor Alan Clayton-Matthews said.

The job of compiling fiscal year-end tax collection figures is more difficult this year because layoffs at the Department of Revenue mean 400,000 taxpayers still await tax refunds that they normally would receive in March or April. Collectively, the state owes them $265 million, officials believe. "That's a risk factor," said LeBovidge. "Until you open the envelopes and process them, we positively won't know."

The state did fiscal somersaults to ensure delivery of a fiscal year-ending $1.1 billion local aid payment to cities and towns, and to make sure it had enough cash on hand to meet its debt service obligations. There was little cash left in the till, not enough to pay all of those refunds. State officials said they've been managing the state's cash with the expectation that the refunds would be delivered in July and August.

But the fiscal year started on July 1 with state government again spending more than it can afford.

But state finance officials do have a rough estimate of the state's fiscal 2002 tax take. They offered it just before the close of business June 28, the best time of the week to break bad news. For the fiscal year, receipts are off a record $2.5 billion, a historic and precipitous drop that none of the experts predicted.

"We don't have the market cornered on forecasting obviously," said Sullivan. "I don't think anybody is going to accuse A&F or the House and Senate of hiding Nostradamus on our payroll."

Inside the building, you'd never know there was a fiscal crisis. Budget conferees were said to be meeting, but would not even identify the location of those meetings, much less talk about progress or issues. Swift was on vacation, having signed a $2 billion interim budget to keep government running. And lawmakers were back home, awaiting signals from the secret budget talks.

Senate Minority Leader Brian Lees said a meeting of top Swift administration and legislative leaders is needed to find common ground on major changes to the budget proposals. But Lees said he didn't expect that type of meeting to occur for another two or three weeks. It's possible, Lees said, that lawmakers will again empower budget conferees to fashion a response to the new $540 million budget shortfall.

Sullivan said agreement on the scope of the problem is needed before solutions can be discussed. Like most others, he wasn't around Friday (July 5) to say whether any agreement had been reached.

But private sector leaders are not encouraging the Swift administration to expect any economic miracles. Sullivan said officials from the retail, utilities, housing and high tech industries recently offered briefings.

"We had them all here," he said recently. "Basically they were saying that stock options are something that they're either not offering or if they're offering, people are not exercising. Bonuses have been linked to performance. A lot of the performance of these companies is down. Profits are down. Real estate's performing okay but a lot of people who have come out of the stock market are now speculating in real estate, which doesn't bode well for that industry because that could be artificially high right now."

The numbers and economic assessments are dry but critical - tax receipts to a large extent drive the policy and spending agendas on Beacon Hill. When the budget is so far out of balance, it becomes the paramount concern, pushing other legislative initiatives aside. That's the dynamic here these days.

- The House on July 1 gave initial approval to legislation changing the way the state delivers education services to students learning English. The bill was pitched as an alternative to a ballot question limiting bilingual students to one year of transitional classes, and proposals to preserve the core of the present system. The legislation is designed to limit the amount of time students remain in bilingual classes, introduce more accountability for student achievement and retain local decision-making.

• Senate panel suggests regulation of credit counselors. They're supposed to help people out from under crushing debt problems. But consumers say some credit counselors are scam artists and the Senate Post Audit Committee this week recommended more regulation of the growing industry.

• Individual MCAS results circulated to school districts. State education officials mailed results to school administrators indicating how individual students fared on MCAS multiple choice questions. The goal is to fine-tune instruction and help thousands of students at risk of not graduating next year unless they pass the math and English MCAS exams.

• Cutting popular government programs and raising taxes is supposed to generate public outrage and spawn political challenges. At least in theory anyways. But not in Massachusetts. The Massachusetts Money and Politics Project reported that three of every four House and Senate members will not face a major party opponent this fall. Democratic voters in only 21 percent of House districts will have a choice in September. And only 4 percent of Republican primaries this fall will have more than one candidate. Project officials say competition at the ballot box has declined every election year since 1990.

Rising campaigning costs and one-party dominance are diminishing competition, the report said. In the last election cycle, the average cost of a winning House campaign was $44,000, up 58 percent in the last three cycles, and $128,000 for the average winning Senate campaign, up 44 percent. Project officials say redistricting favors incumbents, as well as the dominance of Democrats in the Legislature and the rise in off-election year spending aimed at shoring up the standing of incumbents. Officials also said Republicans and third party candidates are not to blame because they face serious fundraising obstacles.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Palmer kickoff draws a crowd

Nathaniel Palmer, running for State Representative for the towns of Hingham, Hull, Cohasset and North Scituate, held his campaign kick-off at the Hingham Community Center on Saturday, June 29. In attendance where more than 100 South Shore residents, including local political matriarch Polly Logan, Plymouth County District Attorney Tim Cruz, and the district's state Senator Bob Hedlund, who served as the event's emcee.

"I have gotten to know Nathaniel Palmer very well and believe strongly in his candidacy," Hedlund said. "I am impressed by his wealth of life experiences and strong business background. He will bring a invaluable wisdom and experience to the state Legislature."

Palmer addressed his candidacy and his motivations for running as "I am running for the very simple reason that we need a real challenge to the tired tax-and-spend mentality on Beacon Hill — and for all the consequences we face in its absence."

"The decisions made on Beacon Hill deeply affect this community and impact all of us personally," Palmer said. " It us and us alone who should decide how our schools are run, whether a train should run through our town, and whether or not we want planes flying overhead night after night."

Palmer also expressed concern about how Beacon Hill's current fiscal policies will effect the next generation about to enter the work force.

"Think of the generation born the year Bill Weld was elected Governor," he said. "At the rate we are spending now, that generation will face budget of over $50 Billion dollars when they enter the work force less than a decade from now. We owe to that generation and we owe to ourselves to do better."

Recognizing the state's long history of technology leadership and innovation, Nathaniel expressed his commitment to seeing that Massachusetts and the South Shore benefit from the coming economic boom in the area of life sciences.

"We just entered the decade of the human genome, and the next wave innovation will be not about Dot-Coms but about science, medicine and medical technology — Massachusetts has the chance to lead the world into a new era," he said.

Healey comes to Hingham

Candidate for Lieutenant Governor endorsed by Mitt Romney, Kerry Healey will be honored by South Shore GOP leaders and voters Sunday, July 28, 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the South Shore Country Club, 274 South St., Hingham.

The brunch is open to the public but reservations are required.

You can RSVP to Michelle McCarthy 617-491-9110, ext. 249

Healey was chair of State GOP Party; teacher of public policy and criminal justice at UMASS Lowell, Endicott College; appointed by Gov. Cellucci to MA criminal history systems board; 10 years experience developing criminal justice policy for U.S. Dept. Justice with policy consulting firm.

Healey is graduate of Harvard College, Ph.D. from Trinity College in Dublin, Ireland, in law and political science.

Healey lives in Beverly with her husband of 16 years and two school aged children.

Business climate concerns Herzfelder

Bruce Herzfelder, Republican candidate for State Treasurer, raised questions about the nation's business climate and the risky investments being made with the state's $30 billion pension fund.

Under the current treasurer, the pension fund has lost money for two years in a row for the first time in modern history, including almost $50 million in risky investments on Enron and WorldCom.

"The next State Treasurer will play a key role in how that pension money is invested, "Herzfelder said. "And after what we have seen the last few years, it is vital to elect someone who has the experience to know how markets work, how secure investments are made and why it is so necessary to make proper judgements about each of the investments that are chosen," he said.

Former Winter Olympics chief and gubernatorial candidate, Mitt Romney highlighted ways in which the Pension Reserves Investment Management Board (PRIM) could establish stricter guidelines for the companies in which they invest the state's retirement dollars. If elected State Treasurer, Herzfelder would oversee the PRIM Board.

"Mitt's proposals make a good deal of sense," Herzfelder said. "From years of experience in law and finance, I have the training and know-how to enforce greater transparency in the affairs of the businesses in which our state invests."

In addition to the reforms proposed by Romney, Herzfelder believes corporate executives who cash out on stock options based on fraudulent accounting or other misleading information disseminated by the company, should have to repay the money made off the stock sale.

Bruce Herzfelder has had a successful career working in banking, on Wall Street in investments and as an entrepreneur. A graduate of Harvard University, Herzfelder also earned his MBA and law degrees at the University of Chicago. He lives in Cohasset with his wife and two children.

Berman is Teen Ink's teacher of the year

Will teach English at CHS this fall

By Amy Lambiaso
ALAMBIAS@CNC.COM

When Christine Berman sees her students from this year at Scituate High School, she will hug them. And she probably will for years to come.

These students were special, she said.

Berman taught English at SHS for 29 years, and in the last months of her tenure there she received a thank you from her students in the best way they knew how — Berman was named Educator of the Year by Teen Ink magazine — a national magazine written by students.

But receiving the award isn't what Berman will remember most from her final year at SHS. She originally resigned from SHS in February and planned to finish the year teaching at Hull, but the students kept her from leaving.

She'll remember the T-shirt campaign started by sophomore Sarah Meyrick — the same student who wrote the winning essay for Teen Ink — giving out T-shirts that said, "SHS Loves Mrs. Berman — Don't Leave."

She'll remember the petition signed by nearly 150 SHS students to convince Berman to stay the full year.

And she'll remember the more than 50 students that wrote essays to Teen Ink about why Berman should be named Educator of the Year. The same essays that still bring tears to Berman's eyes.

"I always loved school growing up," Berman said. "And that's all I ever wanted for my students too — for them to love school and to love learning.

My job is not only to be a teacher, but a nurturer."

And Berman's students said she fits that role perfectly. Calling her an educator, a mentor and a friend, students from SHS rallied together to keep Berman — the most influential teacher some say they've ever had — in Scituate.

"We didn't want to let her go," Sarah said. "We couldn't imagine the rest of the year, or any year without her."

But despite their endless efforts, Berman will be teaching English at Cohasset High School in the fall — one of the toughest decisions she's ever had to make.

"As sad as it is to leave Scituate, and leave all my students there," she said. "I'm excited to start at a new school and bring some new things to them now."

"As sad as it is to leave Scituate, and leave all my students there, I'm excited to start at a new school (Cohasset) and bring some new things to them now."

SHS teacher Christine Berman

One thing Berman will bring to Cohasset is a school newspaper. Berman has been the advisor to the Scituation — the student-run newspaper at SHS — since its first year in 1992. As an award-winning newspaper for the last seven years, the Scituation was recently named best school newspaper for a small school in the 30th Annual High School Newspaper Competition sponsored by Suffolk University.

But Berman's involvement and awards don't end with the school newspaper. She was named the Teacher Who Most Inspires by the students this year, as well as in 1993 — a recognition she said is most thrilling because it is an honor by the students.

Berman has also been named in Who's Who Among American High School Teachers five out of the last seven years. And most recently she was nominated for American Disney Educator of the Year by an anonymous student at SHS.

"I always taught my students to go after fame and glory," she said. "So I guess that's what they're doing for me."

Of the 30 nominees for Disney Educator of the Year, one winner receives $25,000, and $10,000 goes to the teacher's school. And although she admits it is a cliché, Berman said it truly was such an honor just to be nominated for such a prestigious award.

But Berman truly measures her success as a teacher by her students, she said. And Sarah is the perfect example.

Sarah admits to hating English before her freshman year at SHS. But part-way through the school year when she moved to Berman's honors English class, she fell in love with the subject.

"I was told I could write about anything I wanted, and challenge anything I wanted," she said. "I couldn't believe it — and I just fell in love."

But it was more than that, Sarah said. It was the atmosphere Berman created in her classroom and during her classes that was most effective. It was the "open door" policy to Berman's room at all times, inviting anyone in who needed an ear, Sarah said.

"I was given a voice of my own for the first time through writing," Sarah said, adding in her winning essay that she had complete freedom of expression in Berman's class to challenge everything and to say anything.

And when Sarah wrote to Teen Ink nominating Berman, she most of all wanted to thank her. She wanted to thank her for being the motivation to do something she really loves, and something positive in the world — writing.

Sarah now dreams of being a political journalist some day, and plans on taking the classes Berman began at SHS, despite her absence.

"I don't think there is any other teacher in the building that would sacrifice their own personal time to help students in the way she did every day," Sarah said.

But Berman remains modest about her teaching methods, crediting her incredible students and the environment of the classroom for her success.

"It's not really me," she said. "It's the environment you create for the kids that means the most."

And the overwhelming number of essays nominating Berman for Educator of the Year for Teen Ink is proof that she in fact does mean so much to both past and present students. Teen Ink said it had never received so many nominations for one teacher award, and had a difficult time choosing a winner.

Berman still cries when she reads the essays, several months later. And she said she probably always will.

Christine Berman shows-off one of her decorated classroom walls for her students. Berman was known at Scituate High School for her walls filled with playbills, magazine covers and past student pictures. She is going to teach in Cohasset in the fall.

"It has been a very emotionally difficult time for me to leave these students," she said. "But it's something that I have to do."

And regardless of where she is, Berman wants to bring the programs and curriculum, reaching as many students as possible.

"I could teach on a playground if I had to," Berman said. "All I need is a bunch of interested kids."

'Pinocchio' sign-ups

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct a Music Circus registration for "Pinocchio" on Tuesday, July 9 from 9 a.m. to noon, and again, from 5-7 p.m. at the recreation office in the Cohasset Town Hall.

Music Circus registrations for children involved in the Playground Program are held every Tuesday at the recreation office from 9 a.m. to noon, and again from 5-7 p.m. for the remaining two performances.

Music Circus registrations are held two weeks prior to the actual date of the show; for instance, registration on July 9 for "Pinocchio" is for the performance that will be performed on Thursday, July 25. Please consult your summer fliers or the Playground Program Activity brochure for details.

Survivor star set for reunion

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

After months of speculation, the rumors have been confirmed. Survivor 4 star, Kathy Vavrick-O'Brien, who attended high school in Cohasset for two years, will be coming back for her 30th reunion July 26-27.

Vavrick-O'Brien said she'll be coming in for the weekend though she doesn't yet know where she'll be staying. However, one thing she is sure of is that she'd like to use her popularity for a good cause.

"I'd like to support an organization while I'm in town," she said. "I'm trying to raise money for as many different causes as I can."

While she mentioned the Relay For Life and the Sailing Club as two organizations she would like to help out, she said she is open to suggestions.

"I haven't really decided what I want to do yet," she said.

Nick Anderson, a classmate of Vavrick-O'Brien in high school, said he wasn't surprised by her success on the game show.

"Kathy was always positive and has a very live, adventurous spirit," he said. "She was a 'hot ticket'".

Kathy Vavrick-O'Brien

Anderson added he was glad she decided to come back, saying it must reflect the positive experience she had while in town.

"It'll be fun to see her," she said.

Vavrick-O'Brien's return to Cohasset should be exciting. Not since the feature film "House Sitter" that starred Steve Martin and Goldie Hawn has the town gotten so close to a well-known celebrity.

Vavrick-O'Brien transferred to Cohasset High School in 1971 and was a cheerleader for her two years in high school here. In her senior yearbook quotes, she lists "being content in a little house in San Francisco" as her ambition and her favorite expression as "ahhhh - neat." She was also part of the homecoming court in her senior year.

In a previous interview, Vavrick-O'Brien said she fondly remembered her days in Cohasset. She said she most vividly remembers going to the beach, sailing out of the harbor, pool hopping at night and attending shows at the Music Circus.

"I'm so proud of being from Cohasset," she said. "I miss it."

Vavrick-O'Brien currently works as a real estate agent in her hometown of Burlington, Vt.

Before that she was self-employed and ran a small art products store and an event planning business. In 1998, she biked across the United States for the American Lung Association in memory of her father. She is divorced and has one son who had a cameo on the show.

Vavrick-O'Brien was one of 16 people selected out of 50,000 to compete for the $1 million prize.

Chernobyl teens get a taste of Cohasset

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

They're just two ordinary teenagers.

They like riding bikes, playing soccer and listening to music. When not participating in any particular activity, Dmitry Ulezko and Ilya Ahalana, like to veg-out in front of the television. However, unlike most teenagers in Cohasset, Dima and Ilya can't understand what they're watching.

But that's not the only difference that 16-year-old Dima and 13-year-old Ilya have with their Cohasset counterparts. The Russian youths are visiting from Chernobyl as part of the Chernobyl Children's project.

The project was formed in 1991 and gives children raised in that region a respite in America where they can receive world-class medical care in Boston and live free of the radiation that is so deadly.

The two kids have already had their respective visits to the dentist's office, where it Ilya received four fillings, and Dima has been to the doctor while Ilya anxiously awaits his turn in the next week.

The teens arrived last week and are staying at the home of Mary Ann Chase, a resident of 100 Pond St. They will be leaving on July 24.

"These kids are unbelievable," Chase said. "They wake up every morning and make their beds, they open doors and never let me carry a thing. They're truly affectionate and outgoing and appreciative, it's a breath of fresh air."

The two teens, who speak very little English and are only able to communicate with their host family through an interpreter, seem to be enjoying the country.

"Everything has been good," Dima said. "We've been having fun."

Chase said the language barrier has been the biggest difficulty thus far and says she has done a lot of pointing and charade playing in the past week. She recently was trying to convey to the kids that they had a choice, whether to go to a dance or a barbecue, but was unsuccessful.

"They wake up every morning and make their beds, they open doors and never let me carry a thing. They're truly affectionate and outgoing and appreciative, it's a breath of fresh air."
— Mary Ann Chase

"It can be real tough sometimes," she admitted.

The Chases can have an interpreter on hand at all hours of the day over the phone, a service that the program provides. But Mrs. Chase doesn't want to bother the interpreter about simple things like asking the youths what they want to do.

"I just don't want them to be bored," Chase said. "It's been a while since I had teenagers in the house so I've forgotten that sometimes they just like to do nothing."

While the program has provide the kids ample opportunity to become involved with various activities in the Boston area, Chase wishes more of Cohasset's teens would come over to help entertain Dima and Ilya.

"It would be nice if some kids would come over to take them on a bike ride, or to the beach, or just hang out," she said. "

Ilya Ahalana, 13, and Dmitry Ulezko, 16, cool off in the Chases' backyard.

Chase's adopted children for the month are some of the older kids involved with the project this year. There are 130 children visiting the South Shore from Chernobyl this summer and most are under the age of 10.

The 1986 nuclear disaster has left a legacy of radiation-related illnesses for this generation and generations to come. While accurate statistics are nearly impossible to come by in Russia, the former Soviet government claimed the Chernobyl death toll is 41, some estimates have that number as high as 15,000 and thousands more are battling a variety of cancers from radiation exposure.

The radiation impact to the region surrounding the nuclear plant was equivalent of 20 atomic bombs and isn't going away anytime soon.

Dima, who is in relatively good health compared to some of his counterparts, has already had a tumor removed from his brain and has a prosthetic eye. Ilya has had multiple surgeries to remove tumors and suffers from various cancer-related illnesses.

"It's sad to think of all these kids have had to go through," Chase said.

Movie night at The Garage

There will be a "Movie Night" at the Teen Garage on Saturday, July 20. This event will cost $2 per person, and everyone in grades 6 and up is welcome. The movie will begin at 8 p.m. Popcorn will be served free of charge, but other snacks and refreshments will have to be purchased. Please note that The Garage will open as scheduled at 5 p.m. even though the movie will not begin until 8 p.m.

Band concert

The Cohasset Recreation Department's second and final concert on the common for the 2002 season is scheduled for Tuesday, July 23, at 7:30 p.m. on the Cohasset Common.

Performing will be the 30 piece South Shore Concert Band under the direction of Mr. Richard P. Whitmarsh.

You may bring blankets or lawn chairs to sit on, and from time to time, insect repellant is a good item to have on hand.

Concerts are available via the generosity of the South Shore Playhouse Associates Inc. of Cohasset and a matching fund grant from the American Federation of Musicians of New York City, NY.

Post 118 Legion squad in need of wins to stay in playoff hunt

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Scott Arnold is not what you'd call a numbers man.

The Cohasset-Scituate Legion baseball coach knows what his own team's record is (5-8-1), but he truly has no idea what's going on with the teams around him fighting for the last few playoff spots in District 10.

"We need to win, that's all I need to know," said the veteran coach on Tuesday. "We have just six games left and people are worried about the playoff possibilities. Please. If we don't start winning, why should we even want to make the playoffs."

Whether Arnold knows it or not, his team, by winning two of its last four games — a 4-3 thriller over Quincy last Wednesday and a 12-4 blowout of Stoughton on Monday — has kept itself in the thick of the playoff hunt.

Braintree Post 86 (14-0-1) is running away with the league title, and playoff berths for Milton Post 116 (10-5) and West Roxbury Post 78 (9-4-1) also seem relatively assured. The final two playoff spots, however, still appeared well up in the air entering Wednesday night's action.

Morrisette stood in fourth place at 8-7, followed by Weymouth (6-5-2) and then Cohasset in sixth. Cohasset was scheduled to meet Morrisette Tuesday night in what loomed as a huge game for both teams, but that game was postponed due to rain. At the time of this writing, it was unclear when that postponement between these two teams — who were already scheduled to play another game on Saturday night at Quincy's Adams Field — would be made up.

Even coach Arnold acknowledged how big these two remaining games with Morrisette probably are for his team's playoff hopes.

"We probably would need to win both of our games over Morrisette to get in to the playoffs," he noted.

Before the Saturday tilt, Post 118 was scheduled to meet first place Braintree at home yesterday and second place Milton on the road tomorrow. The team will make it a twofer on the weekend, as it hosts last place Stoughton Post 89 on Sunday afternoon. That just leaves the season finale in Weymouth on Tuesday.

Realistically, the Cohasset-Scituate team would likely have a fair shot if it swept Morrisette, Weymouth and Stoughton. Not surprisingly, however, Arnold is

Cohasset's Baird defers first year of college to join AmeriCorps

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The vast majority of incoming college freshmen fall in to one of two categories: those who are excited to be there, and those who aren't but are going anyway because, for the most part, either A) can't think of anything else to do or B) are afraid of how their family and friends will react.

Then there are those like Tim Baird, who is excited about college but not quite ready to go and has found something else to do that no one could possibly denounce: he's agreed to serve a 10-month stint with AmeriCorps, a national equivalent to the Peace Corps.

Tim, a sensational soccer player and trackster during his just-concluded four years at Cohasset High, has arranged to defer his freshman year at the University of Richmond to the fall of 2003. He has also squared this with Richmond's track coach, who recruited him as a distance runner.

"I just didn't feel like I was ready for college," explained Tim, who qualified for the Massachusetts all-state meet each of the past two years, and helped lead the Cohasset

All-Scholastic girls tennis team

STAFF PHOTO/CHRIS BERNSTEIN

Cohasset freshman phenom Elizabeth Stone was a no-brainer for this team after going unbeaten this season without dropping a single set.

Cohasset's Grossman, Stone, Shea and Englander named among area's elite

It should come as a surprise to no one that Cohasset High sees four girls selected for this honor after the team lost just three times all season, captured its second consecutive South Shore League co-championship and advanced to the semifinals in the south sectionals of the state tourney.

On the whole, though, as is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process was not an easy one.

Several of the young women you see listed here as "Honorable Mentions" received serous consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

After consulting with area coaches, however, we feel secure that we chose the top 10 singles players and top four doubles teams in Marinerland for this honor.

Singles

Lindsay Grossman – Junior
First singles – Cohasset

Lindsay Grossman

By Lindsay's standards, 9-3 was a bad season, as these were the first three losses of her high school career…her losses all came to fellow Mariner All-Scholastic selectees: Norwell's Angie Bizzozero once in league play and Hingham Megan Doyle twice in non-league play…helped the Lady Skippers to their second straight league co-championship with Norwell and a run in to the final four of the Southeastern Mass. sectionals…now 31-3 for her varsity career…has earned SSL all-star honors each of her three years…made it three-for-three this spring in her career over Norwell High superstar Sara Bitetti (who is off to try her luck next year with the Providence College tennis team), with a thrilling come-from-behind victory that saw her rally from a 6-0, 5-2 deficit…knocked off Canton's talented Marie Sakolovsky in the sectional quarterfinals…will play in various summer tourneys, looking to finish her high school career with a flourish and hopefully draw some college interest…considering playing tennis in college and is looking at Tulane, Colgate and NYU, among others…father Jeff played number one singles for Colgate University…played on a virtual par with Chelsea Mills, Massachusetts' number two ranked player, at the State Individuals….also a Mariner All-Scholastic in basketball, as well as a standout with the CHS field hockey team in the fall.

Elizabeth Stone – Freshman
Second singles – Cohasset

Elizabeth Stone

Burst on to the varsity scene to give Cohasset the most frightening 1-2 punch in the South Shore League (along with fellow Mariner All-Scholastic Lindsay Grossman)… went undefeated in match play without giving up so much as a set the entire year, helping the Lady Skippers to their second straight South Shore League co-championship…remarkably, lost only four games in regular season play…posted a 6-0, 6-0 win over fellow Mariner All-Scholastic Angie Bizzozero, the first ever regular season loss for the Norwell star against 31 wins…also recorded huge wins

Cohasset swimmers blow Aqua Dux out of water

Last Wednesday, the Cohasset Swim team faced an impressive Duxbury Yacht Club squad and brought home their second victory of the season. In their first away meet of the year, Cohasset took an early lead and, despite punishing temperatures and Duxbury's best efforts, they stayed ahead of the competition to win with a 184 point margin.

The morning began with the 100 yard medleys and, the eight and under boys and girls took off with their usual energy to produce wins in each of their events (boys: 1st: Salerno; Culhane; Mahoney; Durkin; 2nd: Fontaine; McCarthy, M.; Adkins; Kennedy; 3rd: Kissick; Faber; MacCormack; Murphy; girls: 1st: Farren, A.; Haber; Berube; Donohue; 3rd: Buckley; Farren, N.; Caron; Gibbons). The ten and under boys kept the pace with first, second and third positions (1st: Carrier; Porter; Shipp; Doonan; 2nd: Ofsthun; Leahy; Durkin, T.; Durkin, J.; 3rd: Queenan; Yeager; Buckley; Murphy) and the girls just missed the win but placed second, third and fifth (2nd: Mahoney; Zappolo; Lehr; Michalowski; 3rd: Culhane; Teague; Musto; Karski; 5th: Regan; Fortin; McBride; Kucinski).

The twelve and under boys again just missed their win, but took second, third and fourth places, while the girls pushed back to finish first in their event (boys: 2nd: Doonan; Hunt; Cunningham; Drybanski; 3rd: Porter; Kelly, T. Yeager, Daly; 4th: Connors; DeGiacomo; Kuppens; Harper; girls: 1st: Hernan; Lehr; Mahoney; Meehan; 3rd: Teague; Fortin; Campbell; Anderson; 4th: Ryan, Salerno; Sacks; Leahy). With wins in both the boys and girls seventeen and under races, success in the medleys gave Cohasset a head start and a 20 point lead (boys: 1st: Tehranian; Zappolo; Conway; Lehr; 2nd: Blackburn; Daly; Berg; McCarthy; girls: 1st: Durkin; Anderson; Daly; Lehr; 3rd: Englander; Previte; Swain; Musto; 4th: Jerome; Whoriskey; Ogrodnik; Regan).

The ten and under fifty frees were up next and, once again, Cohasset took the win in both the boys and girls events (boys: 1st: Doonan; B.; 3rd: Ofsthun, C.; 4th: Buckley, T.; girls: 1st: Lehr, V.; 2nd: Culhane, C.; 3rd: Teague, K.).

In the individual medleys, the in matches against perennial powers Canton, Hingham and Westwood…went 3-0 in Cohasset's post-season run to sectional semifinals…SSL All-Star…lost in the South Sectional Individual tournament to number one seed Katrina Elder-Bush…has represented the USTA of New England on both the Zonal and Super National teams…the high honors student also play soccer and golf, and enjoys skiing…this summer, she will work as a tennis instructor and spend time performing community service in Utah and Arizona…sister of Kelly Stone, a 2001 Cohasset High grad who starred as a doubles player.

Meaghan Doyle - Freshman
First singles - Hingham

Meaghan Doyle

A freshman phenom, Doyle proved invaluable for Hingham at the No. 1 spot…The newcomer went 14-2 this season to help lead the Harborwomen to its second-straight Patriot League title (Hingham shared the honor with Duxbury, both at 11-1)…Her steady performance on the court helped Hingham advance to the Div. 1 South Sectional quarterfinals, where they fell to eventual state champion Westwood…A highlight of the season for Doyle was when she twice defeated fellow All-Scholastic Lindsey Grossman, of Cohasset…The youngster also took Duxbury's talented Laura Groezinger to three sets in their first meeting…Just a freshman, Doyle still has a lot of tennis to play at HHS. Hingham coach Deb Boles: "She had a great couple of wins this year and played very well against tough opponents. I think with a little more experience and a little more tournament play, she's going to be a real contender."

Sara Bitetti – Senior
First singles - Norwell

Sara Bitetti

Wrapped up her outstanding four year singles career for the Lady Clippers with a record of 51-14, including 39-3 in South Shore League play…this power hitter finished her final regular season playing first singles at 16-1, playing a huge role in the Lady Clippers second straight league co-championship…went 2-1 in the post-season to help the Norwell girls in to the state sectional semifinals…also reached the quarterfinals of the state individual tourney…all three of her career SSL losses came to fellow Mariner All-Scholastic Lindsay Grossman (Cohasset)…a four year South Shore League tennis all-star…two time Mariner All-Scholastic…also an outstanding distance runner for Norwell High who earned league all-star honors for winter track once, and in cross country all three years she competed (freshman through junior)…the sister of NHS senior to be Sam Bitetti, a top 10 New England ranked player…Sara will attend Providence College with an eye toward engineering, and try to make that school's tennis team as a walk-on…she has been in contact with PC's head tennis coach…Norwell girls tennis coach Derek Sulc: "Sara is just an extremely talented player who hits the ball hard and consistently. She has a great baseline game and serve and is extremely sound technically. She can put opponents away with winners, which you don't always see at this level."

Angie Bizzozero - Sophomore
Second singles – Norwell

Angie Bizzozero

The Soph. sensation followed up her unbeaten 15-0 freshman season at third singles with a stellar 16-1 season at second singles, helping the Lady Clippers to their second straight South Shore League co-championship…went 3-0 in the post-season to lead the Norwell girls in to the state sectional semifinals…two time SSL all-star…only loss came to fellow Mariner All-Scholastic selection Elizabeth Stone (who went unbeaten this season)…Angie is also plays soccer and basketball for Norwell High…plays summer league softball…enjoys surfing and snowboarding… Norwell girls tennis coach Derek Sulc: "Angie is such an incredibly energetic player. She plays with a lot of heart and is just fierce emotionally. You combine that natural athleticism with that kind of fire and desire to win, and you've got something special."

Meghan Duffy - Junior
Second singles - Marshfield

Made the difficult jump from second doubles to second singles this year and had much success at it…Duffy went 15-3 as a singles player this season, earning her recognition as an Old Colony League All-star…Her solid performance at the No. 2 spot helped Marshfield finish third (10-4, 14-5 overall) in the highly-competitive OCL behind champs Barnstable, an EMass finalist, and runners up Falmouth… Duffy also recorded two wins for the Marshfield team in two Div. 1 South Sectional matches…Duffy teamed with junior Erin Stanton last year at second doubles and earned All-star recognition from the Atlantic Coast League…The junior is a standout on two other MHS sports teams, playing field hockey in the fall and basketball in the winter…Duffy is making her second appearance on a Mariner All-Scholastic squad as she was named to our girls hoop team this winter.,.Duffy will captain all three teams next year. Marshfield coach Roberta Daniele: "Meghan had a wonderful year. She worked hard all season to improve and really developed into a fine singles player. She covers the court so well."

Meghan Duffy

Claire Karoff - Junior
Second/Third singles - Hingham

Claire Karoff

Was the gem of the Patriot League co-champion Harborwomen team, consistently recording solid performances at the No. 3 and No. 2 spots…A two-year varsity player and first-time starter and PL All-star, Karoff went 13-3 this season for Hingham (13-5), who tied Duxbury for the PL title at 11-1…Karoff was the only Hingham player to have won both of her matches against Duxbury, which helped ice the 3-2 win that led to a share of the PL crown…She also clinched the match-winning point in the team's 3-2 first-round match against Medfield in this year's Div. 1 South Sectional tourney…Her patience on the court was her greatest attribute, consistently hitting the extra shot for a point…Karoff will return to the singles scene next season for HHS. Hingham coach Deb Boles: "You can tell Claire worked a lot in the off-season. She came in and wanted to be a regular participant and she proved to be more than deserving of the role. She's very patient and smart player, and knows how to wear her opponent down."

Heather Haggerty - Freshman
Second singles - Hanover

Heather Haggerty

In just her first varsity year of tennis for Hanover, Haggerty impressed coaches in the Patriot League so much that she received All-star recognition…A solid find for the Lady Indians at the No. 2 spot, Haggerty dropped only two matches, while winning 13…Came up big in matches against Scituate and Rockland, which helped Hanover finish a solid third in the newly realigned Patriot League with a 7-5 record…The team was 7-8 overall, just missing qualifying for the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney for the second-straight season…Haggerty filled in for No. 1 singles player Katheryn Cummings twice this season and won both matches…Just a freshman, Haggerty still has a long tennis career ahead of her at HHS and will battle for the top spot next season. Hanover coach Jim Sylvia: "She was our most consistent performer and had a great freshman season. She's a strong player who doesn't get frazzled if she gets behind a game or a point. She doesn't let it bother her. She's also a great third set player. It will be interesting to see the battle for the top next year."

Katy McCleary - Senior (Capt.)
Second singles - Abington

A two-year starter at the No. 2 spot, McCleary enjoyed another solid spring tennis campaign for the ever-improving Abington Green Wave… McCleary went 15-3 in matches this season, helping to lead Abington to its best-ever finish in the South Shore League (second, 8-4)…Only SSL co-champions Norwell and Cohasset were able to battle the Green Wave…McCleary's solid skills also helped Abington qualify for the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney, where the team advanced to the quarterfinals and finished with a 15-5 overall mark…A first-time SSL All-star and three-year team MVP selection, McCleary was a co-captain of the team for the second-straight year…McCleary plans to attend college and may continue her tennis career. Abington coach Marc Liberatore: "Katy is a great baseline player. She's a very patient player out there and takes a long time to get her points. She's a kid that plays to improve and has always been a great leader. She's very mentally tough."

Danielle Spencer - Junior
Third singles - Abington

A two-time South Shore League All-star and Mariner All-Scholastic for the Green Wave, Spencer had yet another solid season from the No. 3 spot…Spencer went 14-4 on the year and was instrumental in helping Abington record one of its best-ever seasons at 15-5 and an impressive second-place finish in the SSL behind co-champs Norwell and Cohasset…Spencer played tennis only recreationally before earning a spot on Abington's varsity squad last year…She made an immediate impact that season, going 17-2…This year, she helped lead the Green Wave to the quarterfinals of the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney…Received the team's "Heart Award" for playing a Rockland match with a broken pinky…With two seniors graduating from the No. 1 and No. 2 singles spots, Spencer will be the top solo prospect next season and will co-captain the team…The junior also plays basketball for AHS. Abington coach Marc Liberatore: "She's a much more aggressive player and goes right after the first serve. She hits hard and is able to mix it up. She has a good tennis personality and is always herself on the court."

Doubles

Katie Ryan/Lauren Benbenek
First Doubles - Marshfield

Katie Ryan

Lauren Benbenek

One of the most dominating doubles teams on the South Shore, Ryan and Benbenek went 15-4 this season, earning them a spot on the Old Colony League All-star team…This was the duo's second season together… Ryan, a senior captain, and Benbenek, a junior, were Atlantic Coast League All-stars last season…The pair's combination of strength and consistency on the court proved invaluable this season, helping to lead Marshfield to a third-place finish in the OCL behind Barnstable and Falmouth…The duo also advanced to the quarterfinals of the South Sectional Individual Championships this season…Ryan will play Div. 3 tennis at Suffolk University next year, while Benbenek will return to MHS as a co-captain. Marshfield coach Roberta Daniele: "Katie began playing year round and developed into a very strong all-around player. Lauren probably has the best tennis skills of anyone on the team."

Jess Purcell/Meghan Slater
First Doubles - Hingham

Meghan Slater

Playing for the second time this season this talented duo went 10-6 for the Patriot League co-champion Harborwomen (who tied with Duxbury at 11-1)…Battled some of the toughest doubles talent on the South Shore in Duxbury, Cohasset, and Notre Dame, often taking those opponents to three sets…Both two-year PL All-stars, Slater, a senior, provided solid overall court coverage, while Purcell, a junior, was the team's force at the net…The duo's consistency on the court helped lead the 13-5 Hingham team to the quarterfinals of the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney…The team also played well in the State Individual tournament…Honorable mentions to the Mariner All-Scholastic team last year as a second doubles team, the duo is making their first appearance on our squad…A 2002 grad, Slater will be off to college in the fall, while Purcell will return as a senior next season. Hingham coach Deb Boles: "This was their second year together and you could see that they really gelled well. Their style of play complimented each other and created good karma on the court."

Ashley Dye/Megan Kelly
First Doubles - Norwell

Ashley Dye

Megan Kelly

Really showed their talent in the post-season, going 3-0 to help lead the Lady Clippers in to the south sectional semifinals, including clutch three set wins over gifted pairs from Bourne and Old Rochester… Dye, a senior, and Kelly, a junior, only got the chance to play together four times during the regular season (winning all four times) due to injuries, sickness and subsequent jumbled lineups, but still were unanimously selected as South Shore League all-stars…helped Lady Clippers to second straight SSL co-championship…beat Cohasset's talented first doubles pairing of Holly Gramm and Julie Shea (a fellow Mariner All-Scholastic), 6-3, 6-2, in early season win that helped assure second consecutive SSL co-championship with Cohasset…Kelly was ill with mononucleosis in the second go-round, which Cohasset won, 5-0…Ashley, who also played field hockey for four years at NHS, will attend the University of South Carolina this fall…Megan also plays high school soccer…Norwell girls tennis coach Derek Sulc: "Ashley and Megan simply know how to play doubles tennis. They're both strong singles players, but they shine as doubles. They just clicked as a team. They know each other's strengths, and they played to those very well play to those."

Two time Mariner All-Scholastic selectee Lindsay Grossman went 9-3, losing her first three regular season matches ever this year, but was still a lock for this team. All three of her setbacks came to fellow All-Scholastic team members Meaghan Doyle (twice) and Angie Bizzozero.

Julie Shea/Kate Englander
First Doubles - Cohasset

Julie Shea

This veteran singles player (Shea) and freshman newcomer (Englander) played like veteran partners, rarely feeling much challenge on their way to a 12-0 season together… also went 3-0 in Lady Skippers post-season run to sectional semifinals…twice beat Hingham's talented first pair in non-league play…lost in state individual tourney to Notre Dame doubles pair that won the regional championship…Julie, a junior, is also a member of the high school soccer and swim teams, and the sister of former CHS three sport star Erik Shea (Class of 2001, soccer, basketball, tennis), who now plays soccer at Bowdoin… Kate plays soccer year round. Getting his hands dirty

High spring track team to consecutive unbeaten seasons in the South Shore League. "I don't feel like I've experienced a lot so far in my life, and I wanted to get out there and do something before I started school again."

Tim stumbled upon the AmeriCorps Web site (www.americorps.org) a few months back on a weekend quest to find something worthwhile to do before beginning his college life. He'd originally considered the Peace Corps, but had some understandable reservations about leaving the U.S. in light of recent world and national events.

Tim Baird is postponing his collegiate academic and athletic careers for one year.

AmeriCorps struck his fancy almost immediately, and the more he read, the more convinced he became this was for him.

"It seemed to have everything I wanted," he said. "I contacted them almost immediately, did all of the paperwork, and was accepted in to the program."

Readers can dismiss the thought that this might be some sort of rationalization for eschewing academia. Tim is an excellent student. In fact, he was president of Cohasset High's National Honors Society chapter.

In point of fact, the maturity illustrated in his rationale for this decision seems to belie his age.

"I've been a little sheltered growing up in Cohasset," Tim concedes. "I'm sure I'm going to have some eye-opening experiences with AmeriCorps, but I'm excited about that. I think I'm going to grow a little bit from this."

AmeriCorps is a network of national service programs that engage more than 50,000 Americans each year in intensive service to meet critical needs in education, public safety, health, and the environment.

Tim will be leaving for South Carolina to begin his AmeriCorps service in September, shortly after the vast majority of his fellow 2002 alums have left for college. He is uncertain at this time of precisely what his responsibilities will entail. He has been told he will likely be involved in three or four different "projects."

"It looks like I'll get a variety of experiences," Tim reports. "I could be in the inter city one day, and out in the woods the next, and then somewhere else completely different after that."

One of the possibilities he seems most excited about is being trained as a forest firefighter, as it would give him a chance to study the environment up close and personal before he begins studying it in the classroom a year from now.

"I want to get my hands dirty," he says chuckling, pun obviously intended. "I'm planning to major in biology or something else that relates to the environment. If I can take something from this (AmeriCorps) experience that helps me there, that'll be a nice bonus."

AmeriCorps members serve through more than 2,100 nonprofits, public agencies, and faith-based organizations. They tutor and mentor youth, build affordable housing, teach computer skills, clean parks and streams, run after-school programs, and help communities respond to disasters. Created in 1993, AmeriCorps is part of the Corporation for National and Community Service, which also oversees Senior Corps and Learn and Serve America. Together these programs engage more than two million Americans of all ages and backgrounds in service each year.

Since 1994, more than 250,000 men and women have served in AmeriCorps, providing needed assistance to millions of Americans. AmeriCorps provides trained, dedicated people to help non-profits accomplish more and make more effective use of volunteers. President Bush has asked AmeriCorps to expand its work in public safety, public health, and disaster relief to assist in homeland security. The President has also proposed expanding AmeriCorps as part of his USA Freedom Corps initiative. Those interested in obtainign more information on AmeriCorps can visit its website (www.americorps.org).
